Two Dismissed--

According to the story told by the trio, Perkins said, the third student finally talked them out of stealing the battery.

They decided to get some cables merely to jump and charge the worn out battery on the second student's auto.

While they were coming back with the cables, the Campus Patrol arrived on the scene and the two students bolted. The third, however, remained, and, Perkins said, after realizing the futility of protecting his acquaintances, revealed the name of the student whose car battery was the one they were attempting to replace.

The third student was released after questioning and later that night (at about 2 a.m. Tuesday) talked the other two into turning themselves in.

Perkins said the case was taken

Architecture Students Design Modern, 3000-Seat Auditorium

By CATHY FLECK

If Arch. 105 students have their way, the University's auditorium of 1970 will seat 3000 persons in an ultra-modern, acoustically good building which will be a social focus for the entire Centre County area.

They probably won't have their way, of course, since their models of auditoriums on the fourth floor of Sackett Building were designed according to principles stipulated for a course taught by Walter G. Reis, visiting professor of architecture.

Reis said yesterday that as far as he knew, none of the seven designs would be used by the University in planning for the much-needed auditorium.

The student planned auditorium has a seating capacity of 3000 with a separate recital hall seating 500 adjacent to the main building. Both these buildings were designed to supply a social focus not only for the University but the entire county.

The auditorium provides unobstructed vision of the performers and easy access to the most remote seat. The stage was designed to accommodate a full symphony orchestra of approximately 100 musicians.

Students designed the recital hall with facilities for an experimental theater and flexibility for the testing of new production forms and techniques.

The designs provide a stage with ample space for horizontal shifting of scenery into a stage loft. Other facilities included in the designed auditorium are rehearsal rooms for the auditorium and the recital hall, a workshop for the preparation of scenery and models including subdivisions for carpentry and painting work.

Provisions for a loading dock, costume shop, dressing rooms, storage rooms, and administrative office and shower rooms for performers have also been made in the designs.

Reis said the major problem to be solved in designing an auditorium is acoustics. The new auditorium should have a good acoustical system and the best visual acuity.

The designs are on display on the fourth floor of Sackett Building.
