Informal Rush Now in Effect For 176 Coeds

A total of 176 freshman and upperclass women are eligible for informal sorority rush in the 2-week period which began Monday.

Twenty-seven registered within the last week and 149 were automatically eligible through formal rushing registration.

Of those registered, 112 are freshmen, 52 are sophomores and 12 are juniors.

Rushees may attend a series of chatter dates in sorority suites from 1 until 5 p.m. and from 6:30 until 8 p.m. every weekday except Wednesday.

Invitations will be issued by sorority members who will slip them under rushees' doors. They must be answered by 1 p.m. of the following day at the dean of women's office in 105 Old Main.

Bids may be sent out beginning March 9, and rushees must answer them within three days. Bids which are received on March 16 may be answered up until March 19. Rushees may be ribboned immediately after accepting bids. A semi-strict silence will be in effect until a rushee answers her bid.

Television's Effectiveness Investigated

The Division of Academic Research and Services is conducting research on the effectiveness of television and other means of communication on public opinion.

The division has received a $16,000 grant from the Television Bureau of Advertising, Inc., to carry on the study.

It is expected that experiments will involve Central Pennsylvania audiences on open-circuit television, and closed circuit programs on the campus with students participating.

A bibliography covering the fields of mass communication is being prepared by the division. It includes television, radio and motion pictures. Later experiments will be conducted on the effectiveness of mass communication media in learning and other behavioral changes.

With this background, the researchers will concentrate on television as a medium of mass communication and education.

Dr. Frank Hartman, research associate, is coordinator of the project. Two graduate students, John Hundley, a candidate for a doctor of philosophy degree in psychology, and Miss Hannah Schatter, who is working for a master of science degree in psychology, are participating in the research effort.

About 10 undergraduate psychology students are assisting in the preparation of the bibliography which began in September. Dr. Leland Beik, assistant professor of marketing, is serving as a consultant.

Few Students Seek Credits by Exams

By CAROL BLAKESLEE

Only a handful of students each year take advantage of a University program to get credit by examination, according to Dr. Robert G. Bernreuter, special assistant for student affairs.

The program is primarily intended to benefit students who have done work in absentia, at another school, but Bernreuter said there is "no reason at all why a student could not study for a course during the summer and get credit for it by taking an exam."

The Senate regulation, L-4, making credit by examination possible, has been in effect for about 25 years, Bernreuter said. However, he said, students who have taken part in the program have almost always taken a course in some other school whose credits are not acceptable at the University.

A great number of them are graduate students, although credits acquired by examination are acceptable for any degree if the student has met other requirements for the desired degree.

A candidate for a bachelor's degree, for example, must have earned at least 60 of the last 75 credits required in his curriculum by enrollment in courses on campus, but the rest may be obtained by examination if the student wishes.

To get permission to take an examination for credit, a student must have the authorization of both his dean and the head of the department in which the course is taught.

Credit for the course will not be granted unless the student passes the examination with a grade of C or higher. If the grade is C or higher, according to Senate regulations, it will be reported as "Ex" only.

There is a $1 fee for each credit obtained by examination except for graduate students and anyone presenting a written waiver from the Dean of Admissions.
