Councils May Back Assembly Candidates

By DENNY MALICK

The bloc of student councils fighting representation by classes in the proposed Student Government Association assembly will probably resolve the dispute without further amendments to the plan.

Robert LaBar, Agriculture Student Council president, said at the conclusion of last night's All-University Cabinet meeting that each council will probably back one man for assembly to insure its representation there.

LaBar stressed that this was not definite but said: "After discussing this with several of the other council presidents, I feel we will be able to convince our councils of this plan."

LaBar referred to the Home Economics and Mineral Industries councils.

Under this plan, he said, each council would take the responsibility of finding someone qualified through previous experience and activities for the assembly. Then it would campaign for his election, he said.

LaBar told Cabinet earlier that it was essentially the aim of the dissenting councils to have at least one member from each college in the assembly.

The council discussion came up before Cabinet on a motion by Eleanor Judy, president of Home Economics Student Council, to reconsider the representation question. This would have delayed approval of the proposed constitution until at least next week.

However, after reconsidering the action, the motion was defeated unanimously and the council representation dispute was introduced for general Cabinet discussion.

After much involved discussion, Miss Judy suggested that debate be closed and if any amendments were desired by the councils, they would be introduced at the final reading of the constitution next Thursday.
