Schultes Resigns As TIM Head

Edward Schultes resigned his position as president of Town Independent Men at the TIM council meeting Wednesday night.

In his letter of resignation he said that he resigned as TIM president and as a member of the Association of Independent Men council "without a feeling of accomplishment, but of regret that I couldn't continue to adequately fulfill my position due to scholastic reasons."

Town independent men may pick up self-nomination blanks for TIM council at the Hetzel Union Building desk.

There are six vacancies on the council. The self-nomination blanks are petitions which must be signed by 25 persons and presented before the council by the self-nominees at the next meeting.

Philip Haines, chairman of the social committee, reported that the Senate Sub-committee on Student Affairs took no definite action last Thursday on the proposed Las Vegas night. He suggested to the council that there would be too little time to work on it if it were scheduled April 4 as planned. The $350 appropriated for the event will be used next year if it is postponed.

The council voted approval of a TIM banquet, and a committee was set up to investigate the problems concerning it and to present at the next meeting suggestions of a time and date and an estimated cost.

LA to Add New Major, 46 Courses

Plans for a new major in anthropology were approved by the faculty of the College of the Liberal Arts yesterday.

Also approved was the addition of 46 new courses, 20 of them in art and architectural history, and 57 changes concerning course designations, titles, catalog descriptions and prerequisites.

The anthropology major will require 27 credits in anthropology, archaeology and sociology, 9 credits chosen from the allied fields of biology, geography and psychology, and free electives to complete requirements for graduation.

Twenty new courses in art and architectural history were needed to expand and revise the undergraduate and graduate program, according to Winston R. Weisman, associate professor in the department.

He said the department has been underdeveloped for long time and needs more course material to work with, especially on the 400 and 500 course level. Weisman said the department would like to develop a major in AAH eventually.

Other additions were made in anthropology, art, comparative literature, history, journalism, mathematics, philosophy and religious studies.
