

Tibet's Dalai Lama Denies Red Charges

MUSSOORIE, India (AP)—Tibet's exiled Dalai Lama struck back yesterday at Red Chinese charges that his statement denouncing their rule in his country was issued by someone else. He declared the statement was issued under his authority "and I stand by it."

The 23-year-old religious and political leader in a statement at Tezpur Saturday accused Red China of breaking its pledge of self-rule for Tibet, interfering with religious affairs, destroying monasteries, and killing and enslaving Buddhist holy men.

Two days later the official New China News Agency in Peiping denounced the statement as being full of lies. The agency said there were suspicions as to whether it was made by the Dalai Lama. The agency said the statement was issued through an Indian diplomatic official.

"I wish to make it clear," he said, "that the earlier statement was issued under my authority and indicated my views and I stand by it. I am making this brief statement to correct the wrong impression created by the New China News Agency report and do not propose to state anything more at present."

Dollfuss expects to get new data on the atmosphere around Venus, the closest planet at this time, without the interference of the earth's denser atmosphere.

A parachute is extended between the gondola and the rope tying the balloons together. When Dollfuss is ready to descend, he will release balloons by setting off small electrically fired explosive charges intended to sever the nylon rope.

When enough balloons have been separated to start the descent, the parachute will open to ease the gondola to earth.

Herter Takes Office; Ike Gives Support

WASHINGTON (AP)—Christian A. Herter took over formally yesterday as secretary of state. President Eisenhower told Herter he is the best qualified man available to direct the nation's foreign policy.

Eisenhower publicly pledged his full support as the former Massachusetts governor was sworn in to office at the White House succeeding John Foster Dulles. Dulles, seriously ill with cancer, resigned.

Vice President Richard M. Nixon, congressional leaders, virtually the entire Eisenhower Cabinet, and Herter's family witnessed the brief ceremony as he took over as the 54th secretary of state.

An applauding throng of some 600 State Department employees greeted their new chief afterward. Herter, who once was a junior foreign service officer, promised they would all work together to strive to keep the United States and the world at peace.

At the White House, the 64-year-old New Englander, standing without the crutches he frequently uses because of arthritis, told Eisenhower he deeply appreciated the President's trust in picking him for the job.

U.S. Denies Red Request

WASHINGTON (AP)—The United States scornfully turned down yesterday a Soviet request that this country halt its buildup of nuclear missiles capability for West Germany pending negotiations over Germany's future.

The Soviet bid was made in a note which the Kremlin sent to Washington Tuesday. Its rejection was the first important public move in foreign policy following the swearing in Wednesday of Christian A. Herter as secretary of state.

The events gave substance to what Herter's aides have been saying: that he will maintain the major lines of U.S. foreign policy charted by former Secretary John Foster Dulles.

The Soviets protested against the United States supplying modern weapons, including missiles capable of delivering nuclear warheads, to West Germany and other NATO allies. The Soviets have objected many times in the past to the rearming of West Germany—a project undertaken after the Soviets started building up military-type organizations in Communist East Germany.

French Scientist Views Venus From Balloon

PARIS (AP)—A cluster of 100 white weather balloons, strung together like a pearl necklace, last night bore Audouin Dollfuss toward the atmosphere for a clear view of the planet Venus.

Dollfuss, 34-year-old scientist and balloonist, is riding in a shiny sealed aluminum gondola. He was hoping to rise to about 82,500 feet.

The hydrogen-filled balloons, tied in group of three to 1500 feet of nylon rope, took off in a windless night under a full moon.

An electronic telescope is mounted on a metal frame above the aluminum gondola. Recording devices lead from the telescope to the gondola.

Dollfuss expects to get new data on the atmosphere around Venus, the closest planet at this time, without the interference of the earth's denser atmosphere.

A parachute is extended between the gondola and the rope tying the balloons together. When Dollfuss is ready to descend, he will release balloons by setting off small electrically fired explosive charges intended to sever the nylon rope.

When enough balloons have been separated to start the descent, the parachute will open to ease the gondola to earth.

THE MANY LOVES OF THORWALD DOCKSTADER

When Thorwald Dockstader—sophomore, epicure, and sportsman—first took up smoking, he did not simply choose the first brand of cigarettes that came to hand. He did what any sophomore, epicure, and sportsman would do: he sampled several brands and then picked the mildest, tastiest, pleasiest of all—Philip Morris, of course!

Similarly, when Thorwald took up girls, he did not simply select the first one who came along. He sampled. First he took out an English literature major named Elizabeth Barrett Grisit, a wisp of a girl with luminous eyes and a soul that shimmered with a rare, unearthly beauty. Trippingly, trippingly, she walked with Thorwald upon the beach and sat with him behind a windward dune and listened to a sea shell and sighed sweetly and took out a little gold pencil and a little morocco notebook and wrote a little poem:

*I will lie upon the shore,
I will be a dreamer,
I will feel the sea once more
Pounding on my femur.*

Thorwald's second date was with a physical education major named Peaches Glendower, a broth of a girl with a ready smile and a size 18 neck. She took Thorwald down to the cinder track where they jogged around 50 times to open the pores. Then they played four games of squash, six sets of tennis, 36 holes of golf, nine innings of one old cat, six chukkers of lacrosse, and a mile and a quarter of leap frog. Then they went ten rounds with eight-ounce gloves and then they had heaping bowls of bran and whey and exchanged a manly handshake and went home to their respective whirlpool baths.

"I think I'll stick with PHILIP MORRIS" he said

Thorwald's final date was with a golden-haired, creamy-browed, green-eyed, red-tipped, full-calved girl named Totsi Sigafos. Totsi was not majoring in anything. As she often said, "Gee whillikers, what's college for anyhow—to fill your head full of icky old facts, or to discover the shining essence that is YOU?"

Totsi started the evening with Thorwald at a luxurious restaurant where she consumed her own weight in Cornish rock hen. From there they went to a de luxe movie palace where Totsi had popcorn with butter. Then she had a bag of chocolate covered raisins—also with butter. Then they went to a costly ballroom and cha-cha'd till dawn, tipping the band every eight bars. Then they went to a Chinese restaurant where Totsi, unable to decipher the large and baffling menu, found a simple way out of her dilemma: she ordered one of everything. Then Thorwald took her to the women's dorm, boosted her in the window, and went downtown to wait for the employment office to open.

While waiting, Thorwald thought over all of his girls and came to a sensible decision. "I think," he said to himself, "that I will stick with Philip Morris. I am not rich enough for girls."

Anybody is rich enough for Philip Morris—and for Philip Morris's brother cigarette, filter-tip Marlboro, the cigarette with better "makin's". The flavor's fine, the filter filters, the price is right.
