It was proposed at a previous meeting that if a freshman senator runs for another WSGA office and wins that position,

MI to Hold Open House Next Fall

Mineral Industries Student Council will sponsor an open house next fall on a non-football weekend to create interest in the mineral industries curriculum and to possibly influence promising high school students to enter the college.

Eight hundred high schools have been contacted by the council to determine interest in such a program. Of the schools which have responded 50 to 75 per cent were interested, according to a report on the proposed open house presented at the council meeting Wednesday night.

Also discussed were the final arrangements being made for the Mineral Industries banquet May 9 at the Centre Hills Country Club. Among the five awards to be presented at the dinner is the Havens Award which is awarded to a scholastically outstanding Mineral Industries student.

William Grundy Havens, founder of the award, will be the guest speaker at the banquet. Past recipients of the award and faculty members have been invited.

The possibility of placing a permanent bulletin board in the rotunda of the Mineral Industries Building was also brought up at the meeting. The board would be used exclusively for announcements pertaining to the curriculum.

University To Print Book By Architect

The University Press will publish an architectural book Wednesday by a husband and wife who are former faculty members.

"Rehabilitation Center Planning, an Architectural Guide," was written by F. Cuthbert Salmon, former associate professor of architecture, and Christine F. Salmon, former associate professor of housing and home art and chairman of the division at home art. The Salmons are both registered architects.

Salmon was named professor and head of the School of Architecture and Applied Arts at Oklahoma State University, effective Feb. 1.

This book explains the rehabilitation problem to the architect and presents some possible solutions. It also points out the kind of contribution an architect can make in planning such a center.

A 32-page supplement of plans and programs of rehabilitation centers in this country and Canada has been published with the book. T. Rowland Slingluff, director of the University Press, said the Press will publish such a supplement annually.

The book is the result of a project conducted by the University, the Conference of Rehabilitation Centers and the American Institute of Architects. Salmon was director of the project.

The Salmons have specialized in the design of buildings for the care of mentally and physically handicapped. They are also consultants for the National Society for Crippled Children.

During May the Press will publish two other books. They are "Philosophy and Argument" by Dr. Henry W. Johnstone, Jr., associate professor of philosophy; and "Jean Girardoux: His Life and Works" by Dr. Laurent LeSage, professor of romance languages.

Confusion Causes Hospital Complaints

A member of the Safety Commission told Cabinet Thursday night that the majority of complaints against the Rittenour Health Center are based on a lack of information or misinformation on the part of the students involved.

Nancy Kress, chairman of the commission, released the report following a 2-hour discussion and tour led by Dr. Herbert R. Glenn, in addition to other investigations.

Miss Kress said none of the cases made known to the commission definitely indicated negligence on the part of the hospital staff. She asked that all specific complaints involving the Health Center be brought to the attention of the committee so they may be subsequently investigated.

A member of the commission met with Elwood F. Olver, director of the Division of Security, for a general discussion and briefing session.

Miss Kress said Olver expressed concern over damage inflicted on the fire alarm systems and safety appliances by students and stressed that the equipment was intended for the safety of the building's occupants.

Cabinet members questioned the fact that there is no direct central alarm system from the various residence halls to the fire company. Miss Kress said the alarm inside the dormitories is to alert students but that a call must be made to the fire company in addition to sounding the alarm.

Miss Kress was asked to see if a central alarm system could be worked out in the residence halls.

In other business, Steve Ott, chairman of the center-campus integration committee, gave a progress report on response by centers to the integration plan.

Ott told Cabinet he had received affirmative responses from the Behrend and Scranton centers and negative replies from Harrisburg and New Kensington centers. Other centers have not indicated whether or not they would like to be included in the program, he said.

2 Centers Abolish Air Force ROTC

The University has discontinued the Air Force ROTC programs at the Hazleton and Altoona campuses for "economic and educational reasons."

Col. Orin H. Rigley Jr., professor and head of the Department of Air Science, advised President Eric A. Walker to stop the programs since neither was producing the expected officer material.

Rigley said that only three of the 220 cadets were enrolled in advanced ROTC in the last three years at the Hazleton campus. The Altoona campus produced an average of only two a year for the four years of the ROTC program.
