University Establishes New Institute

An Institute of Public Administration, to be established by the University Sept. 1, will work with and assist in training students for careers in public service.

Besides the training of personnel, the institute will also conduct research and offer assistance to government agencies at all levels.

The institute will operate as a unit of the College of the Liberal Arts. It will cooperate with similar units at other Pennsylvania universities in the conduct of in-service training programs and in research and the publication of research findings, said President Eric A. Walker.

Dr. Ben Euwema, dean of the College of the Liberal Arts, said the institute will work closely with the department of political science in the training of undergraduates and with the Graduate School in its program leading to the professional degree of master of public administration.

The institute will promote conferences and non-credit training programs for officials of federal, state and local government and will encourage and publish governmental research findings.

Swamps To Be Studied In Florida

Deep in the swamps of the Florida Everglades, a team of University scientists will seek new knowledge of the nature of organic materials found in the earth's crust.

Dr. William Spackman, associate professor of paleobotany who is in charge of coal research, will lead his third expedition to the Florida swamplands this summer.

With him will be C. Philip Dolsen, University petrologist, and Mrs. Dolsen, a research assistant in geology. The party will explore the Everglades in boats and light aircraft. Two houseboats will serve as field laboratories.

The expedition is part of a research project sponsored by the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission on "Mineralogy, Petrography and Paleobotany of Uranium Bearing Lignites."

The researchers will study the sediments produced in the swampy environment and will compare them with older coal and lignite beds found in other parts of the country. Modern counterparts of these older beds now are forming in the Florida swamps, Spackman explains.

He feels that through studies of these newer sediments, light will be shed on the nature of older organic materials, including uranium-bearing coals and lignites.
