

Variety Spices Director's Job

Warren Smith, associate professor of theater arts, is probably the most versatile man connected with the University's Mateer Playhouse at Standing Stone.

As managing director of the playhouse, it is his job to see that every phase of the "physical plant" functions smoothly and efficiently.

Indigent Receive Aid From UCA

The most underprivileged children in the nation—those of migrant workers—are being cared for under the current volunteer program of the University Christian Association.

The program, which started July 8 under the direction of the Child Development and Family Relations Department and the Education Department at the University will continue until Aug. 5.

A Day Care center for pre-school children and elementary education for older ones will be among the main features of the school. The children and their parents will also participate in children's clubs, athletic events, and religious services.

Last year, 150 children lived in the Potter County Migrant Camps. These children receive inadequate care and schooling due to their constant traveling.

Volunteers who wish to participate will work with the Chaplain to Migrants, a seminary student, on the project.

Six years ago, only 4 per cent of all U.S. families owned a second car. Today, the figure stands at 17 per cent. During the last six years, automotive advertisers have increased their investment in daily newspapers 104 per cent.

This job includes everything from helping to form the budget for each season to ordering the nails and glue for the scenery. He is in charge of the actual hiring of the actors and the signing of their contracts.

Each winter he and the director meet to decide which plays will be presented at Mateer the following season. This involves the reading of hundreds of scripts and exhaustive correspondence with the writers and their agents.

Smith has been associated with the University as an instructor in theater arts since 1946. He has a master of arts degree in theater arts from Iowa State University.

Although primarily an instructor in playwriting, he has taken an active interest in all forms of the theater on the campus.

The popular 5 O'clock Theater, which produces student-written plays during the regular semesters, was founded by Smith as a training ground for his students. He also directs two shows a year for the Penn State Players.

Smith has been managing director of the Mateer Playhouse since its purchase by the University last year.
