

4400 Will Arrive For Orientation

About 4400 new students will arrive on campus Sept. 13, to begin Orientation Week activities at the University, Dr. Robert G. Bernreuter, dean of admissions and registrar, said yesterday.

Among the new arrivals will be 3200 freshmen, 700 students from other campuses, and 500 students with advanced standing.

The Sunday before Orientation Week is traditionally a busy time on the campus, as parents and friends of the new students come for a visit to the University and to aid in unpacking and getting settled.

The upperclass students will begin to arrive September 15, since registration for the fall semester takes place Sept. 16-19. Classes begin at 8 a.m. Sept. 21.

University Plants Will Reach Peak

Nearly 50,000 individual plants, representing 1170 varieties of annuals, will reach the peak of their bloom at the University during the next week.

Robert P. Meahl, professor of horticulture, says the flowers will achieve their brightest hues about Aug. 17.

The University world-famous flower gardens, which serve as a testing ground for all-America flower awards, last year attracted some 10,000 visitors over a three-month period.

As in former years, petunias still are more numerous than other plantings. Other species include snapdragons, marigolds, zinnias, verbena and morning glories.

Prof Will Take Leave

Yar G. Chomicky, associate professor of art education, has been granted a five-month leave of absence, effective Feb. 1.

He plans to paint and do creative work while beginning work on a textbook in basic sculpturing.

Bolduc Outlines Duties

Patrol Is Campus 'Watchman'

By NANCY KLING

"We are simply night watchmen," said Lucien E. Bolduc, chief of the University Campus Patrol, summerizing in a few words the functions and duties of the patrol.

Bolduc, who has been chief of the patrol for nearly three years, is a retired Army colonel and served as professor of military science and tactics from 1951 through 1955 at the University.

In an interview, he commented on parking areas and facilities as some of the biggest problems of the patrol. "When people park in the wrong area, they take up the space of people who are assigned to that area," he said.

"The problem is to arrange for the proper amount of overload in each of these areas," he said. According to Bolduc, there are 18 different steps to be taken before making parking allocations and judging the amount of overload in each area.

Bolduc said that in parking areas which are assigned mainly to students, you can figure up to as much as 100 per cent overload because of the constant flow of students in and out of the areas.

In areas allocated to staff parking, the overload is usually about 25 per cent.

Bolduc stated that "99 per cent of the students and adults in this community are law abiding" and if you just take the time to explain to them why restrictions are made and what purpose they serve, the people will obey.

"The trouble with most people," he said, "is that they can't read. When people drive, they don't bother to read road signs or pay attention to warnings posted."

On the subject of drivers, Bolduc inserted a comment on women drivers. "There is nothing wrong with women drivers, except they drive too slowly."

Turning to the patrol itself, Bolduc said that it was first called the campus patrol in 1932. Before that time it was a part of the custodial services. At present, three clerks, 22 regular personnel and 30 students are employed on the force.

"A greater bulk of our force is on at night. Only three men work during the day, but over half the force works at night," he said.

There is always one officer on duty 24 hours a day, explained Bolduc. Two officers and two men are also on duty during the day. The officers are out in the cruiser car and on the motorcycle, and the other men remain at headquarters.

At night there are three officers and 13 men on duty, he said. These men go into every building on campus, with the exception of the residence halls, at least once a night to check for fire and lock doors and to make sure there is no one in the building.

Bolduc emphasized the fact that traffic violators make up only a very small part of the duties of the campus patrol. "The patrol's greatest job," he said, is done at night—protecting this $100 million investment called the Pennsylvania State University."

HOW "PUBLIC POWER" ADDS TO YOUR TAX BURDEN

One of the most unnecessary government spending programs you could imagine is adding to your tax load every year. It's the multi-billion-dollar spending for federal "public power."

About $5,500,000,000 from you and other taxpayers has already gone for federal government electric power systems. And $10,000,000,000 more is proposed.

Yet it's unnecessary to go on spending more of your tax money to put the federal government farther into the electric business. Independent electric companies like yours are ready and able to supply all the electricity people will need—without depending on your taxes.

Then why does this needless tax spending continue? Only because most people don't know about it. So spread the word among your friends and neighbors. As soon as enough people realize how "public power" adds to their tax burden, they'll put a stop to it.

WHEN "PUBLIC POWER" WINS — YOU LOSE!
Every time another federal "public power" proposal goes through Congress, you are taxed to pay the bill.
