

Blast Kills Six; Bomber Dies

HOUSTON, Tex. (P)—A man tossed a suitcase of explosives on a school playground yesterday and killed three children, himself and two other adults. Police believed one of the dead was the bomber's son.

The explosion sent at least 19 children and the school principal to hospitals

Governor Asks Butler Resign From Position

HARRISBURG (P)—Gov. Lawrence indicated yesterday that Democratic national chairman Paul Butler should resign.

"A big element of the Democratic party is dissatisfied with him," said Lawrence, an influential member of the Democratic National Committee

The committee meets in Washington, D.C., today.

"If I were national chairman and had all that discord, I would resign," Lawrence told his weekly news conference.

But Lawrence declined to issue a flat call for Butler's resignation. "I can only say what I would do if I were chairman."

Lawrence said he didn't know of any movement to oust Butler at the meeting.

However, he added, he could be voted out of office "simply by a majority vote."

Lawrence and Butler have been at political odds since 1954 when the governor backed the late James Finnegan, former Philadelphia Democratic chairman, for party chairman.

Butler criticized Lawrence over the weekend for what Butler termed an alliance with southern Democrats. Lawrence replied that Butler won the chairmanship at New Orleans in 1954 for making an agreement with the southern wing of the party not to inject the segregation issue into national party politics.

"That is the bomber," declared Miss Pat Johnson, a teacher, when police showed her a photograph of Paul Harold Orgeron, 49, a tile contractor in suburban South Houston.

Police Chief Carl Shuptrine said positive identification of Orgeron as the bomber was established through fingerprints taken from a hand found a block from the school.

The Poe Elementary School explosion rocked a 3-acre area in a fashionable residential section near Rice Institute.

The principal, Mrs. R. E. Doty, 64, said a man with a suitcase and a 7-year-old boy came to her office yesterday morning.

The man sought to enroll the boy in the second grade.

"I told him he would have to register him first," the principal said. "He walked out and a few minutes later I got a report of a suspicious man on the school grounds."

In the meantime, the man registered the boy in the school as Dusty Orgeron.

The principal said she and school custodian James Montgomery, 56, talked with the man.

"There were three groups of children on the playground at the time, with their teachers," said Mrs. Doty. "I tried to tell him he would have to leave, but he told me: 'The police can't do anything to me.'"

The next moment, she said, the explosion erupted.

"All I could see was the children," she said. "They were crying."

The dead included a boy who police said was Dusty Orgeron, two other children, a teacher, Montgomery, the custodian, and Orgeron.

Congress Breaks For Vacation

WASHINGTON (P)—A battle-weary Congress broke for home yesterday a scant six hours before the arrival of Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev.

By adjourning its 8-month session, Congress avoided a possible embarrassing dilemma over whether to invite the Soviet leader to address it.

The end of this longest session in eight years came at 6:24 a.m. At that time, the Senate had been working for nearly 21 and a half hours and the House had been sitting off and on for almost 18 and a half hours.

Before scattering for home until next January, Congress took these major actions:

1. Voted to extend the life of the Civil Rights Commission for two years beyond Nov. 8 and to provide $500,000 in funds to carry on its work.

2. Appropriated $3,225,815,000 for foreign aid during this fiscal year — $704,182,000 less than President Eisenhower originally asked.

In the final hours, the Senate planted the seeds of what promises to be a searing battle over broad civil rights legislation at the next session starting Jan. 6. Senators seeking such legislation won an understanding from Democratic and Republican party leaders that a showdown fight on the issue will be waged starting about mid-February.

While Eisenhower spoke Khrushchev began playing with his black homburg hat, gently waving it back and forth. Then he used it as a sunshade for his bald head. He held it a few inches above his head like an umbrella, raising it, then lowering it.

Afterward as the two men rode side by side in an open limousine, Khrushchev repeatedly waved his homburg.

Senate Starts Cut Of Lawrence Budget

HARRISBURG (P)—Senate Republicans yesterday began the task of trimming upward of 60 million dollars from Gov. Lawrence's proposed $1 billion budget.

But after five hours of secret session the lawmakers were still far from agreement on what appropriations should be trimmed or eliminated. The 28-member majority finally called it a day and agreed on a new try today.

GOP leaders have estimated that between $56 and $63 million should be slashed from the governor's program before they will provide the necessary votes for final approval.

Sen. Robert D. Fleming (D-Allegheny), caucus chairman said the caucus was hearing the recommendations of a special GOP subcommittee named to study the budget and find means of cutting it.

It was reported unofficially by sources close to the caucus that the GOP had come nowhere near finding half of the funds it wants to cut, though near the middle point on the budget.

The source said the GOP was discussing plans to amend the bill to add $28 millions for increased school subsidies, to be available only if present tax equalization board assessments were continued, instead of putting into effect a new reassessment.

In other action the Senate again failed to consider three tax proposals, all part of Gov. Lawrence's tax program, which would bring in $19 million. The measures are in position for final passage, but have been hanging fire for weeks.

They include measures doubling the 4-mill tax on bank shares; extending the 8-mill public utility gross receipts tax to gas companies, and extending the hotel occupancy tax from 3 and a half to 4 per cent.

Washington Welcomes Mr. K—

It sounded a bit patronizing when Khrushchev predicted that U.S. scientists will get a rocket to the moon, too, as the Russians claim to have done over the weekend.

"The Soviet pennant, as an old resident of the moon," he said, "will welcome your pennant and they will live there together in peace and friendship as we both should live together on the earth in peace and friendship, as should live in peace and friendship all peoples who inhabit our common mother earth who so generously gives us her gifts."

Eleven times in his 700-word airport talk, the Soviet Premier spoke of peace.

He was still on that theme when he went to the White House for secret conferences with Eisenhower only three hours after his landing.

Perhaps with current Communist menaces to Laos and India in mind, the President told Khrushchev this about the American people: "I assure you that they have no ill will toward any other people, that they covet no territory, no additional power. Nor do they seek to interfere in the international affairs of any other nation."

Eisenhower said he trusted "that a full and frank exchange of views on many subjects may contribute to better understanding, on both sides, of unresolved international questions."

So, he said, it was in the spirit of working toward a common goal of a just, universal and enduring peace that he welcomed Khrushchev to Washington and the United States.
