Ancient Architecture Exhibit Starts Today

Photographs of Angkor Wat and other Angkor monuments in the jungle of Cambodia were chosen by the Department of Architecture as the Hetzel Union art exhibit which opens today.

Milton S. Osborne, head of the department, said he believes that Americans should learn about other peoples and their art since this country has been forced to think internationally. Also he said the exhibit will be valuable because it will show that "there were high civilizations long before our time."

Exhibited in the HUB will be 132 black-and-white photographs taken by Loke Wan Tho, Singapore, which will show the gateway, causeway, libraries, towers and sculpture of Angkor Wat. Angkor is the style of architecture used during the Khymer Empire in Cambodia between the 9th and 13th centuries. The Khymer perfected Oriental architecture and decoration inspired by India's culture.

Angkor Wat is the monument. Suyavarman II, a Khymer ruler built to immortalize himself as the Hindu God. It was built in the first half of the 12th century at the same time as the cathedral of Notre Dame de Paris and Chartres. However, according to Osborn, Angkor Wat was made bigger than the European cathedrals and is noted for its detailed carvings of warriors, dancers and smiling deities, and also, high towers, one of which is 215 feet.

Angkor Wat and the other monuments at the Khymer capital were excavated in the 19th century by the French, and since World War II they have been an attraction for tourists.

Architects have speculated how the monument was constructed and have decided that the natives considered the labor of a religious nature and volunteered willingly.

Loke's photographs were taken for a book on Angkor which was written by Malcolm McDonald, High Commissioner for India. The exhibit comes to the University from the Smithsonian Institute in Washington, D.C.

A reception will be held Sunday as the formal opening of the exhibit.

Town Council Discusses New Garbage Plan

Participation and interest of the residents of State College in operations of the Borough Council were greatly shown Monday night as five of them spoke out against the proposed trash collection plan at the Borough Council meeting.

At the beginning of the meeting, councilman John O'Connor, chairman of the sanitation committee, said that the committee had some definite proposals on the trash plan, but was not ready to submit them to the council.

The proposal was then opened for discussion.

There were numerous complaints against the mandatory aspects of the program such as having outdoor fireplaces and incinerators made illegal, and compulsory collection of trash.

Also some of the residents stated that they felt that there is a need for more coordination and liaison between council members and the voters when a controversial issue such as the trash program arises. The idea of having a ward system of election as they do in larger cities, was suggested by Perry Gentzle Jr.

The council also discussed merchant participation on the off-street parking lots, this was tabled until the next meeting when the borough solicitor will present a legal decision on the matter.

Scholarships For Ed Majors Now Available

Abram W. VanderMeer, associate dean of the College of Education, said last night that $2500 is available for non-recurring scholarships for students in the College of Education.

The $2500 was given as a gift to the Student Personnel and Welfare Committee by Hunter, Campbell and Rea. The money will be divided up into scholarships of $200 or $250 per student.

Applications for the scholarship are available at the Scholarship Office on the second floor of Old Main. They must be returned to the Dean of Education's Office in 101 Burrowes Building by Friday.

The applications will be reviewed by the Student Public and Welfare Committee. They will be rated on the usual qualifications of scholarships, grade point average and on the basis of financial need.

The committee will make its selections from all of the applications in the College of Education, and will consider the applications in such a manner that there will be three or four ratings on each. The ultimate decisions on recommendations will be made by the committee as a whole.
