

3 Nittany Grid Tutors Spend Season Scouting

By SANDY PADWE

Tor Toretta, J. T. White, and Frank Patrick only see one Penn State football game each year, but they play a big part in the success or failure of Lion teams.

To these three Nittany coaches goes the job of scouting opposing teams—a job which takes them to all parts of the country.

Last weekend, for example, Toretta and Patrick were in Boston for the Boston University-West Virginia game while White was in Columbus, Ohio, scouting the Fighting Illini of Illinois in their game with Ohio State.

The only time they get to see a game is at the end of the season when Penn State plays Pitt.

Last weekend, however, Toretta and Patrick showed up at Army after a 6 a.m. plane trip from Boston where BU had beaten West Virginia, 7-0 the night before.

Head Coach Rip Engle slammed up the importance of scouting yesterday afternoon. "Scouting is one of the most important things in football today. You can't win without good reports on opposing teams."

Last week's Army game should prove his point. The Lions beat the Cadets, 17-11 only after Toretta put in nearly 100 hours studying the Cadet team and compiling all types of data.

Toretta, a line coach, saw the Cadets play Boston College and Illinois this year. In addition, he studied movies of Army's games last year.

From all this the former Penn State great made a detailed report on all phases of Army's grid attack. He charted their defenses, offenses, and had separate reports made up on Army personnel. He gave his report to the players and they did the rest.

Patrick, the Lions' backfield coach, has his own system for scouting.

"I like to break scouting down into three phases and make my reports from them," said the Chicago Cardinal star.

"The first phase is what I call

J. T. WHITE
... Lion end coach, scout pre-game observations. I watch the pass receivers, the centers, and linemen and see how good they've mastered fundamentals.

"The second phase is game observations. During the game I look for various offenses and defenses set up by the team I'm scouting. I also watch for their offensive and defensive weaknesses, and I watch for any plays they might have. You also have to get a line on their top players."

"The final phase is post game observations. These come from statistics, movies, newspapers, and discussions with other scouts and coaches."

Patrick continued, "When I've done all these things then I prepare my report and submit it at the coaches' meeting. Then the coaches give the material to the players."

"The coaches scout each opponent at least three times, and after that they feel they have sufficient material."

This week, White will be scouting Illinois for the third time, and Toretta will watch West Virginia in its game with Pitt. Patrick has the Syracuse-Holy Cross game.

Toretta and Patrick have the opportunity of seeing games where both contestants are future Lion opponents.

Asked if they could "kill two birds with one stone," Patrick replied with a big smile, "Nope, it's almost impossible to scout two teams in one game. There's just too much to be done on the team you're supposed to be scouting."

Louisiana State has not one but two hot football streaks going. The Bayou Terrors have stretched their winning skein to 16 games. Tuesday they topped the Associated Press football poll for the 13th straight time.

They are attempting to become the fifth team to repeat as national champion since the poll was started in 1936. The predecessors were Minnesota (1940-41), Army (1944-45), Notre Dame (1946-47) and Oklahoma (1955-56).

L.S.U. wrestled first place from Army on Oct. 14, 1958 and has been unshakable since. The last game the Tigers lost was to Mississippi State 14-6 in the next-to-final contest of the 1957 campaign.

This week L.S.U. grabbed 83 of the 139 first-place votes cast by sports writers and broadcasters to head a top 10 list.

Eleven teams drew votes for United Press International also ranked the Lions tenth in its weekly poll.

first place but L.S.U. clung to No. 1 with 1233 points—217 more than second-place Northwestern.

Newcomers to the select group are Syracuse and Penn State. Syracuse smashed Navy 32-6 last Saturday and Penn State stunned Army 17-11.

1. Louisiana St. (83) (4-0) 1,223
2. Northwestern (10) (3-0) 1,006
3. Texas (10) (4-0) 958
4. Georgia Tech (6) (4-0) 918
5. Mississippi (6) (4-0) 713
6. Purdue (5) (2-0-1) 575
7. Southern Calif. (7) (3-0) 559
8. Syracuse (2) (3-0) 386
9. Iowa (5) (2-1) 357
10. Penn State (4) (4-0) 207

Villanova has lost four games despite the continued insistence of Reagan that the 1959 team was the best looking squad he had since coming to Villanova in 1954.

Villanova was upset in its opener by West Chester State Teachers College and then went from bad to worse in successive licks by Xavier (Ohio), Holy Cross and Boston College.

Reagan, head football coach and director of athletics at Villanova College yesterday resigned his coaching position after his team had dropped its fourth straight game this season to Boston College last Saturday.

Joe Rogers, an assistant to Reagan, was moved up to the head coaching spot. Hanged in effigy by a group of students on the campus two weeks ago, the 39-year-old Reagan said he decided to quit the football job "for the best of the team." Maybe Joe Rogers can snap them out of it.

Booters Score Win On Teamwork Effort

By BILL BARBER

After two weeks of frustrating failure, the Penn State soccer team finally pooled its talented forces to produce its first win of the season, a 6-0 effort over Syracuse.

The Lion's teamwork, which was sorely lacking in the past two downfalls at the hands of Bucknell and West Chester, swung into high gear as the Lion soccermen completely overpowered the Orange.

Lion soccer mentor, Ken Hosterman, was thoroughly pleased with his team's performance, but cautioned that a slacking up against Colgate this weekend could prove fatal.

"This is the first game that we have shown any enthusiasm or hustle," the Lion mentor stated.

"Up to Saturday's game we were doubting our ability to win. But with the spirit and enthusiasm we gained in Saturday's victory over Syracuse, we regained the confidence that we were so badly lacking and should be able to do a better job in the remainder of the season," Hosterman said.

"The squad as a whole displayed a masterpiece of teamwork. The line moved as a unit instead of individuals trying to score on their own. The insides and the halfbacks were really hustling to set that ball up for a goal shot," Hosterman stated.

Hosterman's switching of Howie Farrer from his usual slot at inside left to center forward, proved to be the best move of the season, as the sophomore star booted home four goals.

"Farrer did a great job at center forward. He capitalized on almost every setup that was given to him. However, he couldn't have done it without the overall teamwork," the Lion mentor said. Hosterman was highly enthusiastic in his praise for the Nittany defense network.

"I had predicted earlier in the season that Dave Grubbs and Larry Fegley could well be two of the best goalkeepers in the nation and as far as I'm concerned, they really proved (Continued on page seven)
