

Committee to Study Indie Merger Plan

The committee which will be studying the proposed Association of Independent Men - Leonides merger should "bring us a constitution," Stafford Friday told the AIM Board of Governors Wednesday night.

In proposing that the merger be sent to a committee, Friday said, "This is the only sure way to know what we're doing."

Friday's proposal was to send the merger plan to a committee before officially approving the merger. Carl Smith, AIM parliamentarian, had asked that the merger be approved before a constitution was drawn up.

Leonides Council approved the merger by a vote of 17 to 6 on Monday night. AIM failed to approve the merger by a vote of 30 to 4 on Wednesday.

Yesterday, Smith said that a committee had been set up in conjunction with Leonides and that it would set down the basic principals for the merged organization.

He said he hoped to have this list of principles to present to the AIM Board of Governors for approval at its next meeting. Both Smith and Friday are members of the committee.

At Wednesday's board meeting, Smith had moved that the board approve the merger. If that motion had passed, Smith said he would have moved that a committee be set up to work out a constitution.

At the meeting, he said this would give the committee a clear picture of what they were working on. He added that if AIM and Leonides did not like the constitution or a feasible plan for the new organization could not be made, the motion to merge could be repealed.

Frank Pearson, AIM vice president, said that the merger would solve problems that will arise when the community living program goes into full effect.

4 Faculty Men Attend Institute

Four faculty members participated in the program for the 4th annual Institute for Juvenile and Correctional Personnel held last week.

They were John H. Ferguson, director of the Institute of Public Administration; Robert E. Dunham, instructor of speech; Dr. Harold J. O'Brien, assistant to the dean of the College of the Liberal Arts; and Harold P. Zelko, professor of speech.

Pennsylvania Attorney General Anne X. Alpern spoke on the wide disparity in sentences handed down by different judges and their effect on Pennsylvania Law. She urged that definite minimum sentences for various crimes be set up.

The Institute was conducted by the Institute of Public Administration and the Continuing Education Services of the University.
