Careful Organization Stressed By Julius

By NICKI WOLFORD

Meetings should be carefully planned so the discussion does not "go meandering off" was the advice given to leadership training students last night by Leonard Julius, Student Government Association president.

Julius was explaining the role of public relations in leadership to 335 students enrolled in the largest Leadership Training class in the course's history.

Town Theater Will Feature Student Cast

Penn State students are well represented in the State College Community Theatre's first production. "The Night is My Enemy," a murder mystery drama, will be presented this weekend in the State College Junior High School Auditorium.

Marvin Katz, senior in theatre arts from Drexel Hill, is directing the three-act chiller. He has performed in and directed plays on campus, at Ogontz and in the community.

Thurston Cosner, sophomore in Division of Counseling from Clairton, appears as the romantic interest. He has been active in the Experimental Theatre.

Graduate student Alan Day, experienced in summer stock and Army entertainment, is also featured.

W. E. Cowgill, instructor in the Department of Chemistry, is making his first appearance with the Community Theatre as a servant in the murder house.

Tickets for the play by Fred Carmichael are now on sale at the Hetzel Union desk, Grahams, and Nittany News. Friday and Saturday performances will begin at 8:15 p.m.

As a tool of public relations, he said, meetings serve as a means of bringing people face to face and establishing a two-way communication system.

But he warned that this exchange should be carefully planned to avoid lengthy discussions which leave the subject.

The aspect of public relations which most concerns leaders of organizations, he said, is the ways and means of establishing a favorable impression of your group on the public.

The most important type of attitude which public relations have to deal with is the pacifist, the person who is uninformed and uninterested, because he is most easily influenced, Julius said.

In regard to group persuasion, he said a person concerned with public relations should attempt to influence the group's leader. Persons act differently in a group and tend to follow the leader, he said.

The tools of public relations which leaders use to influence or gain favorable public opinion fall into two main categories the printed word, which includes letters and bulletins, and the spoken word, which includes meetings, speakers' bureaus and grapevine, according to Julius.

Julius was the first speaker in a series of nine scheduled to speak to the leadership class. Next week the group will hear a lecture of the psychology of leadership.
