

Voters Go to Polls Today; 'So What' Attitude Apparent

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Pennsylvania voters, minus any striking issue, choose judges to the Supreme and Superior Courts today in an election marked mainly by indifference.

The campaign has evoked a "so what" attitude from many an average voter, apparently uninterested in the current political oratory.

Election of two appellate jurists—one to a 21-year term on the Supreme Court, the

Ike, Nixon Start Anti-Inflation Bid

WASHINGTON (AP) —An anti-inflation campaign based on millions of pledges to work harder and save more was kicked off yesterday with the blessings of President Eisenhower and Vice President Richard M. Nixon.

Eisenhower also asked that citizens shower Congress with millions of appeals to keep the dollar sound.

Both men addressed a one-day session of representatives of 48 national organizations called to seek means of promoting economic growth and holding down the cost of living.

After they had endorsed the principles of the meeting, the chief sponsor, H. Bruce Palmer of Newark, N. J., told reporters a feature of the drive would be an effort to obtain 10 to 15 million individual pledges. Signers would promise to work productively, buy carefully, save money and support "sound fiscal policies," which Palmer did not spell out.

Addressing the breakfast session, Eisenhower said only public opinion can keep the dollar sound and urged it be exerted through millions of messages to congressmen and federal officials. And he declared that if public opinion fails, economic dictatorship is the alternative.

other for 10 years to the Superior bench — plus three proposed changes in the Commonwealth Constitution are the only statewide ballot issues for a record 5,268,412 registered voters.

Despite expected clear skies, not more than 60 per cent of the voters—possibly about three million—will enter the states 9,006 polling places that open at 7 a.m. and close at 8 p.m.

Principally the election is local. A total of 31 mayors will be elected, plus 50 county judges, and thousands of minor officials. Seventeen communities vote on whether they want Sunday movies.

But even on the municipal level, the politicking has evoked little excitement.

The hottest contest is in Philadelphia, the state's biggest city. Here a name-calling mayoralty race has attracted national attention because of the political prominence of Republican Harold Stassen.

Stassen, former disarmament advisor to President Eisenhower and three times an unsuccessful candidate for the GOP presidential nomination, is striving for a political miracle in his underdog campaign to upset Democratic incumbent Richardson Dilworth.

Only Stassen and his closest supporters predict victory. Everybody else sees a landslide triumph for Dilworth in his bid for a second four-year term.

Actually, there is speculation that the outcome of the two statewide judgeships may hinge on the size of the Democratic majority in Philadelphia. Republicans say they can win the two judge posts if Dilworth's lead is kept below 100,000. Democrats, however, hope to come out of Philadelphia with a bulge of more than 150,000.

Geneva Talks OK'd by UN

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) —The U.N. Political Committee yesterday approved unanimously a resolution tossing all disarmament proposals to the forthcoming Geneva conference.

But just before the vote the United States and the Soviet Union clashed on the emphasis to be placed on Premier Nikita Khrushchev's plan for wiping out all armaments in four years.

Soviet Dep. Foreign Minister Vasily V. Kuznetsov declared the Soviet Union expected that Khrushchev's proposal will be taken as a basis for the work of the 10-nation East-West Committee that will gather in Geneva early next year.

Mediators' Efforts Do Little As Strike Enters 112th Day

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal mediators shuttled between steel industry and union negotiators yesterday. When it was over Steelworkers Union President David J. McDonald said there was "absolutely no headway" toward ending the 111-day-old steel strike.

Government mediation chief Joseph F. Finnegan met separately with both sides in morning and afternoon sessions.

Without showing any optimism, Finnegan announced he would resume his efforts tomorrow morning. He said he hadn't yet decided whether to call the opposing sides together, or to meet with them separately again.

The sessions were put over until tomorrow because the Supreme Court will hear arguments today on a union appeal from a back-to-work order.

R. Conrad Cooper, chairman of the industry's negotiating committee, told reporters "I can't evaluate affirmatively at this point" any sign of progress or hope for an early settlement.

Cooper defended the steel industry's policy of placing its negotiations in the hands of the bargaining team he heads instead of having the top executives of the major steel companies bargain with McDonald.

McDonald, who has campaigned for face-to-face bargaining with the top men of big steel, complained again about having to deal with Cooper's team. He said that in these talks "there are no people who have given the representatives of industry authority to make a settlement."
