

Space Age Jobs Available to Grads

By ROMA NATHANSON
Third of a Series

In this jet age more jobs of a new and exciting nature become available to college graduates.

Boeing Airplane Co., a pioneer in the field of multi-jet aircraft, has openings for students interested in space research, including biological factors. Boeing is the prime contractor for min-uteman guided missiles.

The company's representative, Chuck Jackson, said, "We're interested in someone who knows what he wants to do." The student should plan for the future by choosing two or three industries where he would like to work and learning everything he can about them.

Grades are relative to the student's outside obligations. Jackson said he is just as impressed with the student who has a 'C' average and had to work to get through college as the student who has a much higher average but could devote much more time to his studies.

"Every employer is seeking outstanding men," Jackson said. His idea of the "outstanding man" is the student who has a 'B' average, is on the football team, in a couple of honorary societies and reflects a very neat appearance.

Jackson said that many people hold the mistaken belief that an industry such as Boeing is unstable because 70 per cent of its production is a result of government contracts. This would be saying that the United States government is unstable, he said.

The Anchor Hocking Glassware Corporation with general offices located in Lancaster, Ohio, now employs 12,000 persons.

It is the world's largest manufacturer of machine-made household glassware and ranks second in the manufacture of glass containers, metal and plastic closures and sealing machines.

Clark Michaels, campus interviewer for Anchor Hocking, said he looks for the following in a student: emotional stability, physical appearance, poise, initiative, leadership, company interest, scholarship, activities, and military status.

Anchor Hocking also recruits from all Big Ten schools and awards a scholarship program at the University every year.

Mysterious Visitor Paints Lion Blue

Leopards can't change their spots but the Nittany Lion in the past three weeks has had its coat changed twice—to orange and, as of yesterday, to blue.

The Lion, which was so faithfully guarded during the week preceding the Syracuse game, was painted blue.

Campus patrolmen found the blue Lion while on a routine patrol near the shrine about 3 a.m. yesterday.

Officials said they have no idea who was responsible for the artwork. However, there might be some connection with the coming Penn State-Pitt game.

Workmen were on the job early yesterday morning to begin cleaning the Lion.

claws. Of course, they could have put him in a cage with wheels, but what would they do with him when the game was over?"

With a twinkle in his eye, he added, "This feller would never have been a social lion, anyway."

It's been 16 years since the lion, which wasn't a mountain lion, as is the Nittany Lion, has seen Centre County. Since that time, Shigley has retired from the University faculty and is now professor emeritus of veterinary science.

University FFA Hosts Philippine Group Officers

The University Collegiate Chapter of the Future Farmers of America entertained six officers of the Future Farmers of the Philippines at their last meeting.

These men are touring the United States as part of the United States-Philippine exchange student program. They recently attended the national FFA convention at Kansas City, Mo.
