

THE RISING CITY—in the center of campus, the Pollock Circle Project, will be ready for occupancy in the fall of 1960. The new halls will house 2016 students, 992 of which will be men.

New Pollock Halls To Open Next Fall

Pollock Residence Halls, the only construction project now being built by the University independently of the General State Authority will be ready for occupancy this fall.

The GSA has five projects pending, with four to be completed by April. The Turf Plot Residence Halls, just begun in the fall, will not be completed until 1961.

The new Pollock Halls are near completion, after more than two years of construction. Among the modern conveniences introduced to the University via this project will be the center core system. In this plan a center core of utility rooms will separate residents' rooms. Another modern touch added to the 8-building project is new porcelain enameling.

The project contains one of the largest installations of lightly shaded enamel blocks in the history of university housing, according to the Ingram-Richardson Enamel Manufacturing company.

Consisting of three men's and four women's residence halls, in addition to a dining hall, the project will accommodate 2016 students, including 992 men. The dining hall will provide food service to all the area women, but Pollock men will eat at McElwain, Simmons and Redifer dining halls. The men living across Entrance Rd. at Nittany Residence Halls will dine in the new Pollock building.

GSA projects that are scheduled to be completed by April are the Hammond Engineering Building and north and south wings to Sackett Building, Petroleum Laboratory, Home Economics South and Wagner Building.

The married graduate housing project will have many of its 216 units completed before July 1, and the rest will be occupied in the fall of 1960.

2 Professors Given Award

Two faculty members have been named for the Monograph Prize Award in the Social Sciences of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences.

Dr. Kirtley F. Mather, president of the Academy, has announced that the monograph, "Bargaining and Group Decision Making," by Dr. Sidney Siegel and Dr. Lawrence E. Fouraker, has been selected for the $1000 award.

Siegel is associate professor of psychology while Fouraker is professor of economics and assistant dean for research in the College of Business Administration at Penn State.

In their research, which will be published in book form by McGraw-Hill Publishing Co. in the spring, they have brought together their fields of study, psychology and economics.
