Success Story

Grad Student Operates Local Shop

By SANDY PADWE
It's been a long, tough road, but Frank Shervanick, a graduate student in business administration from Shamokin, is turning the Horatio Alger story into a modern day saga.

The 27-year-old ex-paratrooper who worked three years as a dishwasher, cook and waiter at local fraternities, scraped enough money together last spring and saw the realization of a dream when he went into business for himself.

Shervanick bought Morrell's Sandwich Shop on S. Frazier St., and almost overnight turned it into a budding business enterprise featuring foot-long hoagies, steak sandwiches and meatball sandwiches among other gastronomical delights.

Working nearly 10 hours a day on outside interests isn't the average student's way of getting through college, but Shervanick is used to the hard work.

A 1946 graduate of Shamokin High School in the hard coal fields of Pennsylvania, Shervanick realized at an early age that there wasn't much opportunity in that line of work. So he left for New Jersey in the hope of finding a job to finance a college education.

He bounced around New Jersey for five years with the Ford Motor Co. and just never seemed to hit on a money-making job.

His next stop was the U.S. Army's 82nd Airborne Division. Asked if this is where he got the idea of going into the restaurant business, Shervanick quipped: "The only time I saw a kitchen in the Army was during KP."

When his service hitch ended in 1955, Shervanick enrolled at the University and immediately began learning all he could about business administration.

He compiled a 3.0 All-U average in addition to working at many odd jobs during the school year.

Then came the spring of '59 and an opportunity to go into business for himself.

"A great guy named Harry Morrell gave me a chance I couldn't pass up," said Shervanick while cleaning a shiny new grill. "He had been running the place for 38 years and decided it was time to retire."

"So I asked him the price and he gave me a bargain because he wanted to see someone get a good start."

"I'm not sure if I'd like to do this all my life but right now I'm only concerned with expanding this place and getting through graduate school."

"I think I'd like to try an accounting firm or get a job with one of the bigger corporations in this area and still keep the shop. But you can never tell what will come up. Right now I'm plenty happy the way things are."

Educational Television

Conclusions Agree With Other Studies

By NICKI WOLFORD
Fourth of Series

The general conclusions drawn after the University's 1955 experiment with televised instruction were in agreement with most of the conclusions drawn from other studies being carried on across the nation.

Research on televised instruction was being done mainly by the Department of Defense and colleges and universities.

Prof to Attend Curricula Study In Engineering

Dr. Benjamin A. Whisler, head of the department of Civil Engineering, will participate in a study of ways to better undergraduate engineering curricula this weekend at an engineering educators and professional engineers conference in Ringwood, N.J.

The Cooper Union College has received a grant of $43,410 from the National Science Foundation for this study and will sponsor it in cooperation with the American Society of Civil Engineers and the American Society for Engineering Education.

Among the educational institutions represented at the conference will be the Universities of California, Arkansas, Texas, Arizona, Michigan, Cornell, Columbia, Tulane, Dartmouth, Purdue and Penn State.

Two later conferences will be held before the group brings in its recommendations.

Tribunal Clears Prowl Suspects

Off-Campus Tribunal acquitted two men Wednesday night who were accused of prowling outside McKee Hall about 2:55 a.m. on Dec 18.

They were reported to Campus Patrol as prowlers by the hostess of McKee Hall.

When reached by the patrol car, the men said they had been visiting an apartment downtown and had left there at 2 a.m. They admitted drinking, but were not intoxicated. They said they had walked up the Mall and along the road beside West Halls.

As they reached Thompson Hall, they noticed a patrol car coming up behind them. They began to run, fearing they would be stopped for drinking, by the Campus Patrol.

13 Selected For Grants

Howard A. Cutler, assistant to the vice president for academic affairs, announced yesterday that 13 University students have been selected to be interviewed for the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship.

The interviewing will take place this weekend and next at Haverford College in Haverford, Pa. Eight hundred and thirty nominees from colleges and universities in Pennsylvania and New Jersey will be interviewed. These two states make up District 4 of 15 districts of the national foundation.

Seventy-three fellowships appointments will be made at Haverford, and 62 alternates will be chosen to compete with alternates of the other 14 districts of the foundation.

The fellowships are offered to students planning to do graduate work leading to a career in teaching humanities, social sciences and some natural sciences on the college level. The award is for the first year of graduate study only.

The foundation does not accept applications directly from students. Candidates for the award must be nominated by a faculty member.

Thirty-nine students were recommended by faculty members here. These candidates were then screened by a regional selection committee on the basis of their transcripts, autobiographies of intellectual and academic ideas and letters of recommendation.

Regional selection committees, made up of faculty members from colleges and universities of this district, will do the interviewing at Haverford.

Cutler, who will act as chairman of three of the selection committees, said that any student who has been recommended by a faculty member for this fellowship should consider it a great honor.

HEC Reorganization Approved by Senate

A reorganization plan for the College of Home Economics which provides for a freshman common year program and changes all curriculums to majors, passed the University Senate Thursday.

In explaining the plan to G. Mather, chairman of the Committee on Courses of Study, said one reason for the change was to meet the demands of the University.

The second reason, Mather said, was "to make more obvious to the University community, the purposes and functions of the college that previously have not been apparent."

He said students in the college used to learn only how to make sauces, but now they will be employed by commercial firms concerned with such things as the best way to package foods. The programs are oriented to more professional work, he said.

Explaining the prevailing attitude toward home economics students, Mather said: "Only a small proportion of them major in what you and I think they are majoring in."

The new program involves more of a "re-arrangement than a change," Mather said.

The college will now have only one curriculum instead of four, and the curriculums have been changed to majors. The five majors are divided by "options."

For example, a student in the curriculum of home economics might major in commercial consumer services and have an "option" in merchandising.

After Mather moved for the adoption of the plan, Dr. Walker said: "I wish somebody would tell me what curriculum, major and option mean."

Lawrence E. Dennis, vice president for academic affairs, explained that a committee from the Council of Deans was working on the problem and would make a report in the spring.

In other business, the Senate passed an amendment to its constitution giving membership to the directors of the commonwealth campuses and the directors of the Mont Alto Branch.
