

This is Today's Collegian

The Daily Collegian, operating as a $50 thousand a year business, is one of the largest student newspapers in the country. Its operations are much larger than many small town newspapers. Every Monday through Friday the completely student staff works on assignments, covers meetings and sports events much like reporters and editors of a professional newspaper. As a supplement to the local news coverage, national and international news from The Associated Press is used.

Daily assignments are made, stories are searched out and then written. From the typewriter to the managing editor's desk to the headline writers and the copy editor, the stories travel on daily route.

Editorials and a special editorial policy is carried out by the Collegian Board of Editors. Staffers from freshmen on up contribute special feature stories. The photography staff, in addition to its routine pictures, does its own features on film.

Hundreds of stories filter through the Collegian office daily as staffers do their part in helping the student body keep informed.

EDITOR DENNY MALICK and Assistant Editor Cathy Fleck confer on the editorial page makeup for today's paper. The Board of Editors sets the editorial policy.

STAFFERS CHECK THEIR ideas and the style of their stories with Managing Editor Bill Jaffe. He assigns stories to be written and coordinates all of the news copy to be printed.

HEADLINES ARE WRITTEN by candidates and sophomore boarders. Amy Rosenthal, above, sitting in the "slot," supervises headwriting as the junior board headline editor.

IT'S IN THE HANDS of professionals—Spencer Wellhofer, right, delivers finished stories to Bill Canouse, shop foreman at the Centre Daily Times where the paper is printed.

DAILY ASSIGNMENTS are made for the staffers. It is their job to check and initial the assignment sheet—and then get the story.

REPORTERS ARE RESPONSIBLE for searching out and writing the stories. Here Nicki Wolford, junior boarder, takes a story over a special telephone.

THE DAILY COLLEGIAN uses The Associated Press Wire service for its state and national news service. Sophomore Bob Tacelosky aid Carol Blakeslee, junior boarder, edit and write headlines for wire stories.

PHOTOGRAPHS ARE PART OF THE paper too (as can be seen by this page.) They are checked by Photography Editor Marty Scherr and then engraved on the machine seen here, the Fairchild Scan-a-Graver.
