

Government to Subsidize AFROTC Grad Students

By KAY MILLS

Outstanding Air Force ROTC graduates may work toward a masters degree at government expense, according to a recent U.S. Air Force announcement.

Col. Orin H. Rigley, Jr., commandant of the University Air Force ROTC program, said that these students will be commissioned officers, but their active field duty will be delayed until completion of their degrees.

"They will be given regular pay and allowances in addition to paid tuition," Col. Rigley said. "They do not necessarily have to study at the university from which they received their bachelors degree."

This is the latest in a series of moves to upgrade the educational standards of the Air Force. Col. Rigley said that the Air Force finds itself "low man on the educational totem pole" with the Navy and Army having better educated officers.

"This situation was caused by the Air Force's acceptance during World War II of many men who had only a high school education," he said.

The Air Force now has a minimum goal a bachelors degree for all officers. They are also shooting for having 10 to 20 per cent of its officers with masters degrees, Col Rigley said.

"This goal is not as hard as it may seem because about 80 per cent of the new officers now come from ROTC programs or the Air Force Academy, so they already have degrees."

"Bootstrapping" is another part of this program, officially known as Training at Civilian Educational Institutions under the Air Force Institute of Technology.

In "bootstrapping," the Air Force continues pay and allowances while granting leave to all officers who are within six months of completing their bachelors degrees.

In areas where there is a need for advanced degrees, the Air Force will give pay and allowances plus paying tuition for the one or two years work for a masters or a second bachelors degree.

Junior Placed On Probation

A sixth semester student in the College of Liberal Arts has been placed on disciplinary probation for altering official University forms.

The student, who was brought before the Academic Disciplinary Committee of the Liberal Arts College, admitted changing a drop-ad form after it had been signed by a faculty advisor. The incident, which took place last fall, was not detected until the end of the semester.

The student was given a grade of "F" in the course which he had attended without permission. The student has also been placed on disciplinary probation to the Academic Disciplinary Committee through the seventh semester and permanent notation of this action has been entered on the student's record.

The student has been given the right to petition for the removal of that notation during the eighth semester.
