Agreement Made

Students Stop Picketing Barber Shop

By NICKI WOLFORD

Students stopped picketing Bunn's Barber shop at 2:30 p.m. yesterday but this does not mean they are "backing down," Stephen Blum, chairman of the group's policy committee, said.

Picketing stopped after a mutual agreement was made between Kenneth Bunn, owner of the shop, and the student picketers, Blum said.

The joint agreement stipulated that picketing would be stopped for a one-week "cooling-off" period while members of the, as yet nameless, group and Bunn discuss the issue, according to Blum. "This will be mediation," he said, "not demonstration." Both parties agreed to the statement, Blum said. During this period, no Negro student should attempt to get a haircut at the shop and there will be no demonstrations, Blum explained.

"The fact that he wanted to talk to someone is just what we wanted," Blum explained. In a statement issued after the agreement, Bunn and the student spokesman said: "It should be emphasized that this statement should not be confused so that it means either side has backed down on its original principles."

"A joint agreement of the bases for mediation has been reached and that is the sum total of the action at this time."

In explaining the origin of the student group, Blum said, "This is a fantastic exercise in group dynamics." The group should not be identified with other campus organizations or political parties, he explained. The first organization meeting was held last night and Blum, junior in philosophy from Pittsburgh, was elected co-chairman of the future planning and policy committee.

Peter Day, a student spokesman, said that 120 came to a meeting held on Sunday and each one had different ideas on achieving the movement's objectives, which include working on local discrimination problems and expressing sympathy for the southern Negroes' problems.

This issue, Day said, "should not be used as a political tool." During last night's meeting, Blum said, that the group should not be identified with political parties now because there was "no such thing as a bi-partisan effort during an election."

Many of the religious organizations on campus have sent delegations to the meetings.

Council Heads Considered For Cabinet Seats

The SGA Cabinet recommended last night that seating college council presidents on Cabinet be discussed at next year's Student Encampment.

The recommendation followed a long debate on a bill asking that the SGA Constitution be changed to include the college presidents in Cabinet.

The bill will be committed to the SGA Reorganization Committee. Jay Hawley, Rules Committee chairman, explained that it had not been placed on the Assembly agenda for this week because it involved a constitutional change.

The committee felt that the same Assembly members should discuss the bill at all of the three meetings required for a constitutional change, he said. This would be impossible if it were brought up for the first time this week, since the new Assembly takes over next week after elections.

Walton Davis (Sr.-U.) proponent of the bill said he only wished the issue to be taken up for consideration again and discussed on the Assembly floor, rather than have Assembly take action on it immediately.

In other action, Cabinet recommended that a year-round commission be set up to study the possibility of having a few open houses in the fall for prospective rushees in order to orient them to sorority life before they rush was also suggested.

Dean Lipp said that in ten years hence, it is likely that the entire rushing program will have to be revamped because of the large number of women expected on campus then.

Disarmament Controls Asked

GENEVA (AP) — The West insisted yesterday on veto-free arrangements for disarmament, with enforcement centered in a powerful international agency able to audit national budgets, tabulate weapon and manpower levels and even check on military maneuvers.

Francesco Cavaletti of Italy gave the first detailed elaboration of Western control ideas to the 10-nation disarmament committee now entering the third week of its work. He drew a negative response from the Communist side.

The Italian visualized an International Disarmament Organization evolving from embryonic beginnings into a body with broad enforcement powers over great and small nations alike. These powers, of technical rather than political nature, would be sharply defined in a general disarmament treaty.

Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Valerian Zorin hinted the five Western powers were seeking to impose an elaborate espionage system on the Communist world an accusation which the United States, Britain, France, Italy and Canada have disputed.

Zorin said what the West was proposing "would fulfill not only control functions but other functions as well."

The Soviet delegate and U.S. Ambassador Frederick M. Eaton sparred with each other on the control problem without bringing the conference any closer to an agreed method of beginning the work of treaty drafting.

Cavaletti proposed a step-by-step buildup of the machinery and functions of the International Disarmament Organization, beginning with establishment of an interim commission. Then an executive committee of possibly 14 members would be established.

Panhel Analysis

Panhel May Soon Abandon Fall Rush

By SUE LINKROOM Fifth of Series

Panhellenic Council informal fall rushing may be abandoned within the next two years.

In a meeting with the rushing chairmen from each sorority, Dorothy J. Lipp, dean of women, said that by doing away with fall rushing, savings would be made financially and in student energy. Sorority women could prepare wholeheartedly for spring rushing if they did not have to hold fall rushing.

No final decision has been reached yet on the issue.

Some of the chairmen attending the meeting said they felt that they often got their best pledge classes in the fall. Dean Lipp said that the women who did not make their averages to rush their second semester would have to wait until the fourth semester if fall rushing is abandoned.

Suggestions were made to have open bidding for three weeks to pick up coeds who did not rush in the spring. No first-semester students would be eligible for a bid.

Another recommendation was to have fall rushing just for students who had been on campus the previous year and not transfer students. This would decrease the number of rushees.

The major objections to this plan is that junior transfer students would have three semesters as an active sorority member if they could not join one until spring.

Dean Lipp said that an exception could be made for junior transfers but any other transfer students would have to wait until spring to rush.

If the plan to have only one rushing period during a year goes into effect, a suggestion was made to have open houses held on the weekend after spring registration and then a two-week waiting period before formal rushing actually begins.

This would alleviate some of the work that is concentrated into the two weeks of rushing and rush chairmen could start the process of getting recommendations on rushees earlier.

The possibility of having a few open houses in the fall for prospective rushees in order to orient them to sorority life before they rush was also suggested.

Dean Lipp said that in ten years hence, it is likely that the entire rushing program will have to be revamped because of the large number of women expected on campus then.
