Players Exhibit Might Divert Final Studiers

Finals studiers — beware of the exhibit on the first floor of the library that honors the 40th anniversary of the Penn State Players.

The colorful programs, pictures and scripts from past and present Players' productions are more interesting than are history, physics or English texts.

Costumes, miniature reproductions of the sets, posters and pictures from "Italian Straw Hat," the anniversary production, are displayed in one of the two major wall cases.

Programs and scripts from the other six presentations of the 1959-1960 season are also enclosed there.

A tribute to the alumni of the Penn State Players is displayed in the second wall case. Posters, tickets, and pictures from past productions bring the Alumni's work to life.

Outstanding names of the alumni, along with their accomplishments, are listed in an interesting manner.

The showcases in the foyer of the library display pictures of Players' productions that date from 1919 to 1960.

small buildings to be used by the College of Agriculture.

The education building will be built in the general shape of an airplane with the "tail wings" to be used for office space of the dean of the College of Education and faculty members.

The wing section will be used for classrooms and laboratories for the undergraduate instruction of the elementary education, secondary education, business education and art education departments plus part of the music and industrial education departments. The fuselage will be a covered connecting passageway between the two separate structures.

The two-story units will be made of red brick with concrete trim and aluminum window sashes. The concrete trim will be imbedded with metal and rock segments which will add color to the finish.

The main classroom building will have two photographic and television studios along with their adjoining control rooms. This unit will also have two large air-conditioned lecture rooms.

Two laboratory-office buildings and a greenhouse will be built for the College of Agriculture south of Curtin Rd. between Tyson and the United States Pasture Research Laboratory.

The two buildings, constructed of concrete blocks, will provide greenhouse work rooms. One of the buildings will be linked with two existing greenhouses.

The new greenhouse will be built between existing greenhouses and will be connected with a work room.
