University Should Join Academic Vanguard

Investigation of full academic year systems and the feasibility of adopting such a system for Penn State has been under consideration by various levels in the University hierarchy for some time.

The action currently centers in a committee headed by Lawrence E. Dennis, vice president in charge of academic affairs. His committee will make recommendations to the President, who will then make recommendations to the Board of Trustees, who we hope will then decide to install a year-round academic system.

The demands for higher education in America, which lay dormant till awakened by the firing of Sputnik, necessitate that all academic facilities in the country be utilized to the utmost.

The University's multi-million dollar physical plant can not be allowed to lie unused, not only from an idealistic viewpoint but also from simple economic considerations. There would be a negligible difference in physical costs whether the students were here or not and better use can be made of the faculty.

Many systems have already been demonstrated for more efficient use of the professor by the University and at the same time provide a lighter, more equalized load for the professor including time for research and personal study. Pitt requires that each professor take a leave from teaching at least one trimester out of every five and devote the time to research.

When there are more students being turned away from the gates of the University than are allowed to enter each year a system which allows the opportunity for college education to be extended to more of the nation's youth must be followed.

Dennis pointed out that it would be difficult to convince students to enroll in the summer period.

There will be problems to be sure, however, it could be a salvation period for students almost dropping out as well as an acceleration period for those on the other end of the ladder, and still allow more students to be admitted into the University.

The full-year academic schedule will have to be installed sometime and Penn State should join the vanguard by instituting it now.

Stadium--

The ramps underneath the stadium are set on a gentle slope. After winding back and forth for 200 feet you come out on a landing. From here you can go up to the newer part of the stadium. There are four of these ramps on each side.

Another feature is the automatic elevator to the press box. From the press box you can climb to the very top of the stadium, 103 feet above the ground, where the T.V. cameras will be placed. From there you can see a large part of the 4.5 million pounds of steel which makes up the stadium, enough to make about 2,000 cars.

The structural steel of which the stadium is built is assembled with belts like a gigantic erector set. The decking is welded into large sheets. All that remains to be finished before the July 26 completion date is the seat painting, stenciling seat numbers and installation of mesh on some of the rails.

Time Comes To Bar Cuban Red Menace

By J. M. ROBERTS
Associated Press News Analyst

President Eisenhower has now accepted international communism not merely as a force at work in the world, but as an entity, a power which can be barred from the Western Hemisphere even as other world powers are barred.

The problem is to define this international power, recognize it, and act against it before it becomes established.

In the specific application of the concept to Cuba, as the President was doing, how far does the Castro regime have to go in Communist practice, and in cooperation with Soviet Russia, before it is considered Communist dominated and therefore inadmissible?

Does obvious control have to be demonstrated from without, or does obvious allegiance to and reliance upon international communism become enough?

Allegiance and reliance already are being demonstrated. Domination has not been. In a concept such as that outlined by the President, in the specific Cuban application the trouble will come in drawing the dividing line between domination and cooperation.

With Russia stepping in at every point to counter the United States, with Castro's fervent thanks filling the air, with Nikita Khrushchev reminding what he can do to the United States with his rockets, the situation already is far more concrete than a previous one in which the United States acted directly.

In Guatemala there was only an underground alliance between a locally produced government and international communism. An underground alliance between the United States and a locally produced revolutionary group did the job. That case was much simpler.

The President said the Soviet intention to use Cuba is clear, and intervention of a sort which falls under inter-American treaty obligation to resist outside intervention.

If, then, the first intention to bar international communism from the hemisphere is to be attempted, the time has already arrived.

Reston to Lecture

James Reston, chief Washington correspondent for the New York Times, will speak on April 25, 1961, under the sponsorship of the Artists' Series, which will be handling the Lecture Series next year.

Reston, a native of Clydebank, Scotland, is a graduate of the University of Illinois, and began his journalistic career on the Springfield, Ohio, Daily News. He was awarded the Pulitzer Prize for national correspondence in 1945 and for national reporting in 1947.
