Journalism Supervisors To Receive Instruction

Many of America's future journalists will probably get their start on a high school newspaper, but unfortunately many times an English teacher with little or no background in journalism is assigned the task of getting out the school paper.

to his students, he said. James W. Rutledge, Donora, Pa., said he wanted to use some formal instruction this coming year instead of just the laboratory work his students had been doing in the past.

With the increase in high school journalism classes comes an increase in the demand for secondary school teachers who are able to give accurate information, as well as instruction, about journalism.

He felt his students should know more of the basic rudiments of journalism before they put out a newspaper. "Till now," Rutledge said, "our school newspaper was just getting out, rather than getting out in the form of a school newspaper should."

In an effort to meet this demand, the Newspaper Fund, Inc., sponsored by the Wall Street Journal, was established last year to award grants to high school journalism supervisors to enable them to attend college classes in journalism.

Eleven high school instructors are attending summer session classes in journalism at the University under this grant.

He is presently the chairman of the Penn State Chapter of the American Society for Metals, and has been a member of several national committees in the American Society for Metals.

When asked what benefits he derived from this summer's work, William M. Dallam, State College, Pa., said that he has gained much practical background in the preparation of a news story.

This information, as well as other facets of journalism he has studied—for example, the history of journalism and typography—will help him to increase the scope of his teaching

What's in a Name? -- Political Comment

By JAY RAKE
Collegian Reviewer

In line with our recent request for plays our readers would like to see during a summer theatre season we also decided to think about shows the presidential and vice presidential candidates might like to see dedicated to other people in the world of politics.

All periods and areas of the theatre are contained in the list we have collected for this column. (Naturally, they are only in jest.)

Republican candidate for president Richard Nixon's choice of a play to dedicate to his opponent Jack Kennedy is "Yellowjack"; to Nelson Rockefeller, "The Disenchanted"; to President Eisenhower, "The Best Man"; to Robert Kennedy, "Devil's Disciple"; to the Kennedy family, "Three Sisters"; and as a comment on the Democratic candidates, "Misalliance."

John F. Kennedy requested the following shows:

To Nixon, "Too True to Be Good"; to Lyndon B. Johnson, "Taming of the Shrew(d)"; to former president Harry Truman, "Remembrance of Things Past"; to Eisenhower, a one-act play, "In the Rough"; to Adlai Stevenson, "Right You Are If You Think You Are"; and to Pat Nixon, "Girl of the Golden West." His play, dedicated as a comment to the candidate of the GOP, "Time of the Cuckoo."

Other requests came from Johnson to Nixon, "Playboy of the Western World," and to Kennedy, "Damn Yankees." Republican vice presidential candidate Henry Cabot Lodge asked the dedication to Nixon, "Take Me Along" and to Kennedy, "Life With Father."

On a typical work day in the United States, about 37,000 persons are absent due to hay fever, asthma, 29,000 due to chronic sinusitis and 16,000 due to bronchitis.
