

Sanders Discusses Ancient Civilizations

By LOIS HAEGLEY

William Sanders, assistant professor in anthropology, spoke last night at the Sociology Club on his 10-week trip in the Valley of Mexico this summer to study the Teotihuacan Period with other anthropologists and Penn State students.

Many surveys were made to investigate the history of the land use and the techniques of agriculture in this period. Remains of abandoned irrigation canals were found but they are uncertain as to their age. They did find, however, that terrace farming methods were used in the Teotihuacan Period.

Another problem facing the group was the urban and rural settlement patterns of this time. According to Sanders the principle question was whether or not the farming class of people were forced to live in the cities. After intensive research into the remains of the Valley, it was found that there was decidedly a rural and urban population, Sanders said.

They studied the distribution of houses, streets, and major buildings in the urban settlement patterns. They found that the cities and villages of this period were in contact with each other, contrary to former ideas. Leading to this conclusion were the findings of pottery from the market trade.

The students were concerned for the most part with surface surveys. They brought back over 20,000 ancient pottery shards and are now sorting them for further study.

Sanders commented that the natives of the area were very friendly and particularly anxious to speak English with them. Rhoda Segur, one of the students on the trip, commented that the natives held very idealistic pictures of Americans.

The group was financed by a National Research Foundation grant and Dr. Sanders hopes to secure future grants in order to continue their work in this field.

"NUN WILL Ich Ihnen" Was Sagen."
I lost this pen, a Parker 61 on Sat. night last. It is a black one and has been fingernail-polished red on the top to remind me that there is red ink inside, and indeed, one is further able to determine that it is my pen by noting that the red ink is Parker Superchrome red ink which, again, one has an easy time of it telling it from its imitators. Now there will be no reward, other than the satisfaction you can salvage from being such a nice person, a real guy; you see this ad has already cost $2.10. Call Robert Blefko at UN 5-7528.

"DIETZGEN" Slide Rule in vicinity of OL or ME last Friday. If found call Phil Mathewson at UN 5-6281.

LOST ONE pair of glasses, red mahogany plastic frames with beige trim. Finder please call UN 5-5843.

A SET OF keys lost Saturday afternoon between College & Allen Sts. Please call UN 5-8773 if found. There are six keys and a pink and white periscope.

CAMEL HAIR Coat, plaid lining, at Phi Sigma Delta Sat. night. Call Jayne UN 5-6728. Have someone elses.

PAIR OF glasses, black frames—lost on Locust Lane. Call UN 5-7518.

ONE PAIR of glasses, light brown frames. Call Ann Thomson UN 5-2406.
