'crassest' political materialism that any party has ever had the nerve to foist on the American people."

The crux of the problem, Clark said, was best explained by the noted author Arthur Slessinger Jr. Clark quoted Slessinger as saying, "The real question is — are we willing to sacrifice a little bit of private opulence to get rid of a lot of public squalor?"

1952 and 1956. Perhaps his defeat was brought about by the public's misunderstanding or misinterpretation of his aims. In any event, neither Richard M. Nixon nor John F. Kennedy seem willing to risk their presidential ambitions on a similar approach.

We hope this is the case and that both candidates have developed new and potentially successful domestic and foreign policies, which will be revealed by the winning candidate after election day.
