

Teaching Machines To Aid Education

By MEG TEICHHOLTZ
Second of a series

What is a teaching machine? The aim of the educational research project under Title VII of the National Defense Education Act is to find out exactly what it is and what it can do for education.

According to Henry W. Sams, head of the English department and consultant to the project in the English subject area, teaching machines can take the basic teaching of English skills and designate them to a machine thus "excusing the instructor and the student from boredom."

Ed Council Asks Study Of Advisors

The Education Student Council recommended last night that new professors not be made student advisors.

The council also recommended a complete college career plan be mapped out for each student when he is a freshman or a sophomore and that there be a correlation between advisors on opinions of what courses must be taken before student teaching.

Sharon Hoffman, council president, will take these recommendations to the Student Personnel and Welfare Committee, which consists of a faculty representative from each department of education and the three council officers. This committee, acting on an earlier council recommendation, is making an inquiry into the advisory system.

In other business, the council decided to sponsor a volleyball game between education students and faculty members.

A definite time and place for the game has not been announced. If this first game is successful, the council plans to hold other student-faculty sports events.

Student Tickets Remain for Talk On Arab Problem

About 700 student tickets still remain for the first University Lecture Series of the semester, a talk by Lieutenant General Sir John Bagot Glubb at 8:30 p.m. tomorrow in Schwab.

Nearly 200 faculty and non-student tickets also remain for the lecture.

Glubb, a legendary figure in the Arab world and a noted authority on the Middle East, will speak on "The Middle East — Storm Center of the World."

For 36 years he lived among the Arabs as friend and confidant. Glubb also served as Commander of the Arab Legion in the 1940's.

He lived almost entirely with the Bedouins, rarely meeting Europeans and sometimes not speaking a word of English for weeks on end.

He dressed in their garb, ate their food, traveled by camel and slept in tents. He has always remained a British subject.

The personal prestige of Glubb grew to the point where he adjudicated disputes between Arab chieftains and became known as the "uncrowned King of Jordan."

DARE Wants More Study On Town Survey

After much discussion on the proposal that DARE, Direct Action for Racial Equality, assist a town committee on discrimination in its proposed survey of housing situations in State College, DARE postponed its decision until further organization of the survey by a committee.

The survey, which will be sponsored by the Burgess' committee of State College, is intended to determine the exact housing situation in State College in regard to discrimination against all minority groups.

Although the survey would be underwritten by some town group, the committee wants the help of student groups to carry out the actual work of the survey.

In other business in its week-end meeting, DARE decided to invite the Student Government Association Committee on Interracial Problems to their next meeting to explain how DARE could assist in maintaining of the housing list which SGA will control.
