

TOCS Display Artist Revealed Last Night

By JOAN MEHAN

The air of secrecy that surrounded the appearance of a short-lived collage display in the Hetzel Union Building was lifted last night when Mrs. Howard A. Cutler, the wife of the assistant to the vice president for academic affairs, revealed to a WDFM broadcaster that she had designed and put up the display.

"It was all my doing," Mrs. Cutler said. The piece was done originally as a gift for President Eric A. Walker after he had returned from making a speech in Washington, D.C.

HERE TODAY, GONE TOMORROW: That was the story of this display which mysteriously appeared in the Hetzel Union Building lounge early yesterday morning. During the day many students stopped to look at it before it was removed in the late afternoon.

Liquor Letter Policy Will Be Discussed

By DAVE RUNKEL

The University policy on the liquor chain letters which circulated all over campus last Thursday and Friday will be discussed at a meeting of the dean of men's staff this morning.

Leroy S. Austin, associate dean of men, said yesterday, however, that he thought no disciplinary action would be taken because the activity was so widespread.

PSU Ranks 12th Nationally In Enrollment

The University at present ranks 12th nationally in full-time enrollment dropping back one place from its 11th place ranking last year.

The University has 17,767 full-time students as compared to last year's total of 16,717. Total enrollment jumped from 20,377 to 21,656.

In order of full-time enrollment the top 25 universities are California, State University of New York, College of the City of New York, Minnesota, Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan State, Ohio State, Texas, Michigan, Indiana, Penn State, Purdue, New York University, Washington, Missouri, Harvard, Columbia, Florida, Puerto Rico, Louisiana State, Maryland, Cornell, State University of Iowa and Colorado.

Austin said the dean of men's office was interested in stopping the letters rather than punishing the people involved. "Who made money and who lost it probably will never be known," Austin said.

"We have given a clear notice to all students that this kind of activity just can't go on, Austin added. Students who participate in this type of activity after the warning will be dealt with more strictly," he said.

As of now it appears that little can be done about the letter. Horace Segelbaum, counsel for the Liquor Control Board, said in the article that the board is looking into the letters but so far has come up with a blank.

The only possible violation on the board's regulations would occur if a minor or an intoxicated person received the liquor.

"If a person wants to buy a bottle of liquor and give it away, there is nothing the board can do about it," Segelbaum explained.

The display which was put up between 11 p.m. and 3 a.m. Sunday caused controversy when members of the TOCS organization thought it was derogatory towards their group. The art department also felt that collage distracted from the paintings of Stuart H. Frost, instructor in art, which are currently being exhibited in the HUB galleries.

The speech in which Walker spoke on the University and how it related to the needs of people and nations served as her inspiration, said Mrs. Cutler.

The collage was put up anonymously because, Mrs. Cutler said, she wanted others "to add to it and not consider it the work of only one person."

It was taken down at 5:15 p.m. yesterday by George L. Donovan, co-ordinator of student activities, and members of the HUB staff.

Donovan, who authorized the display, said, "I don't understand the significance of the display but know it was put up in the spirit of fun."

Edwin R. Fitzgerald, associate professor of physics and a TOCS member, said that he felt the display was in praise of them.

Mrs. Cutler explained, however, that she thinks that TOCS is a "terrific organization and the display was in praise of them."

Edward L. Mattill, associate professor of art education, said that he thought the purpose of the collage was to stimulate discussion and was done with "no malicious intent." He added that "it was stimulating but untimely."

Frost said that "the display was not directed at me and didn't concern me." Frost also said, however, that the area had been reserved by the art department and he didn't feel that anything else should have been put up.

Storm System to Bring Showers to Local Area

A rapidly developing storm system will spread showers into the local area this afternoon and will maintain inclement conditions through most of tomorrow.

Increasing cloudiness and mild weather is expected today with showers forecast for the afternoon hours. The maximum temperature reading will be near 58 degrees.

Occasional rain and mild weather is indicated for tonight and tomorrow followed by windy and much colder conditions late tomorrow and tomorrow night.

Tonight's low should be about 50 while a maximum of 55 is predicted for tomorrow.

Lumumba's Forces Threatened

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo (P)—Col. Joseph Mobutu, Congo army's chief, said yesterday his forces have surrounded Stanleyville, stronghold of ex-Premier Patrice Lumumba's Communist-leaning lieutenants.

Mobutu said only a United Nations plea to avoid bloodshed stayed him from sending his soldiers in to liquidate rebels in that capital of Oriental Province.

Mobutu warned, however, that his soldiers will strike at the city if either the United Arab Republic or Sudan try to send arms to Stanleyville.

He also threatened to cut off some Nile headwaters in the Congo vital to both the U.A.R. and Sudan, if necessary.

Mobutu ordered the U.A.R. diplomatic mission out of the Congo last week, charging it was trying to restore Lumumba to power. Sudan works closely with the U.A.R.

Candidates Speak On SGA Issues

Elections to Begin Today, Continue Through Tomorrow

By KAY MILLS

Candidates for Student Government Association positions parried questions on their platforms and fired some blasts at their opponents in a press conference held by The Daily Collegian last night.

The question barrage heralded the voting in SGA elections which begins today and continues through tomorrow. Polls will be open both days from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. in Boucke, Willard and on the first floor of the Hetzel Union Building. A voting booth will be open from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m. on the ground floor of the HUB.

Discussing party platforms, Nancy Williams, University candidate for junior assemblyman, said her party advocates consolidation of student government groups into a confederation under SGA. The coordination would provide for unity in student government and would give student views more strength, she added.

She emphasized, however, that the consolidation would be "gradual," and that the groups concerned would work together in planning the confederation, which would eliminate their working at cross purposes. SGA would not be given ultimate powers over these groups, she added.

Independent candidates and those from Campus party felt the move would lead to "red tape" in SGA affairs.

Wayne Ulsh, independent candidate for junior assemblyman, asked whether SGA should not use the strength given under its constitution rather than adding to its organization.

Moving to another plank, Gomer Williams, independent candidate for sophomore class president, said he was "positive" the Campus party's proposed plan of action would not work.

Williams said he learned from Gov. David Lawrence's assistant press secretary that powers over ROTC, parking problems and physical education program do not lie with the governor and the legislature but with the University administration.

Campus party's plan proposes writing and going to the governor and state legislature about such matters if the University administration does not take action on SGA-approved legislation.

Williams suggested instead that the plan of action be applied to the University Board of Trustees.

Nancy Williams said that the governor and legislature were occupied with state government, adding that Campus party's plan was "not realistic" and would serve to antagonize the administration and trustees.

Dennis Eisman, Campus party candidate for junior assemblyman, countered that he would like to make one of the governor's problems the University students' point of view. Eisman said he felt the intent of the proposal had been "twisted." It is to be an appeal to a pressure group to make the students' problems known and to get action on them, he added.

Platforms Attacked In Debate

By MEG TEICHHOLTZ

The problems of implementing a student-run bookstore was the main issue in a debate last night between two independent candidates for SGA assembly and three Campus party candidates.

The debate was the result of a challenge made last week by Dennis Eisman, vice-chairman of Campus party and candidate for his party for junior assemblyman, to debate all candidates on the University Party ticket and all "independent" candidates.

The University party did not appear at the debate and Michael Lazorchak, chairman of University Party said last night that he had not been officially contacted by the elections commission about it.

Robert Umstead, chairman of the commission, told Collegian last night that since Eisman had challenged the other parties openly through his letter in Friday's Collegian, he had not acted in officially informing the other candidates.

During the debate Wayne Ulsh, independent candidate for junior assemblyman, asked Eisman to clarify his party's stand on establishing a non-profit student book store.

Eisman said that from what he can determine publishers permit a mark-up of between 20 and 40 per cent on textbooks and that the reasons SGA in the past has not been able to establish a bookstore was because of pressure from the downtown merchants who would lose money.

Both candidates' platforms include a plank on establishing a bookstore, but Eisman said that should future efforts in this direction not be accepted by the administration, his party will bring the views of the students to the attention of the Governor of Pennsylvania and the State Legislature in accordance with their platforms.

Ulsh countered that more direct action could be taken if the views of the students were taken to the Board of Trustees of the University.

threaten to set up an independent state in Oriental Province in reprisal for Lumumba's arrest.

A U.N. official denied reports that Oriental Province already had seceded from the Congo, saying: "Secession may come one day, but it has certainly not come yet."

He said reports were received from Stanleyville Monday saying Salumu had scheduled a series of public meetings to discuss the future of the province. Salumu told newsmen in Stanleyville Friday the province wants to remain part of the Congo, provided Lumumba is recognized as head of the legitimate government.
