

BU Fees to Finance Multi-Level Garage

By PAT HALLER

(This is the sixth in a series of articles on traffic and parking problems which confront other colleges and universities.)

A parking fee collected from students and faculty using University owned parking lots will partly finance Boston University's first multi-level parking garage, according to the Boston University News.

The fee of 25 cents per car was scheduled so that the University would not have to spend funds on parking facilities which were normally allocated to educational purposes, Kurt M. Hertzfeld, vice president for administrative affairs, said.

The two-level garage with about a 350-car capacity will be located in front of the University-owned building at 700 Commonwealth Ave., the News said. According to Hertzfeld, the garage is scheduled for completion in March.

Hertzfeld said that the construction of the garage and also the expansion of parking facilities at University Field off Gaffney St. were recommended by the Parking Development Corp., who designed the new garage. The expanded lot which originally handled 100 cars now accommodates 250.

The Parking Development Corp. found these two projects the "only hope for immediate improvement of the parking situation," Hertzfeld said. At present, cars can generally park on streets adjacent to the University buildings for only two hours.

The projects are just the first steps in the University's long-range parking program, Hertzfeld added.

Boston University is located in one of the leading educational centers of the world and also the cultural center of New England. Most of the buildings are on Commonwealth Ave. and Bay State Rd. between Kenmore Square and the Boston University Bridge. The University has three residence halls for men and 15 for women.

Mueller Solves Bench Puzzle

Remember that picture in The Daily Collegian of the missing bench top? The clue to its disappearance was received from Otto E. Mueller, director of housing.

It seems that the University must be harboring amazons, since a group of students were able to lift the 8 foot by 22 inch, 6-inch thick, 800-pound limestone top off its supports!

However, in moving the bench, the students dropped and broke it. The Department of Housing has estimated the cost of replacing the bench at $85. Replacement is being delayed, though, in an effort to find the individuals responsible for the damage. According to Mueller they will be assessed for the cost if they are found.

It is just this kind of thoughtlessness that increases the operating costs for the Department of Housing, he said.

Advent Services Will Be Held

Advent Services will be held at 4:15 p.m. Thursday in the Helen Eakin Eisenhower Chapel.

The service will follow the form for Evening Prayer according to the Anglican tradition with Luther H. Harshbarger, University Chaplain, as liturgist.

The Meditation Chapel Choirs under the direction of James W. Beach will sing "Vom Himmel Kommt" and "To Us Is Born Emmanuel" by Michael Praetorius and "Beside Thy Cradle" by Johann Sebastian Bach.

Larry Handwerk, organist for the service, will play "Der tag der ist so freundenreich" and "Vom himmel hoch, da komm ich her" by Johann Sebastian Bach.

"The Festival of Lesson and Carols" is scheduled for 8 p.m. next Tuesday.

In 1860 Penn State students had to rise at 5 a.m., could not miss classes, had to put in three hours of labor a day on the farm and playing cards and liquor were forbidden.

Borough Council Passes Town Traffic Ordinance

The State College Borough Council passed a traffic ordinance last night which will provide for more stop signs, traffic lights and no parking areas in the community.

The council members voted unanimously in favor of the ordinance. They agreed that it would help curb congestion and speeding problems in State College.

West Halls to Support Needy Child Overseas

West Halls Council adopted a plan last night to support a child abroad through the Foster Parent Plan.

The plan will cost about $180 to feed, clothe, and educate a child for one year. Funds will be provided from profits of the council's weekly dances.

The council also appropriated money for Christmas decorations and a 23-inch television set.

The Christmas decorations will be used in Waring and the quadrangle.

London Hillel Director To Speak on Literature

Henry Shaw, director B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation at the University of London, will speak at 8 p.m. Friday at the Hillel services.

He will talk on "The Jew in English Literature."

A reception honoring Shaw and his wife will follow the services. The services are sponsored by the Bellefonte-State College Jewish Community Council and is open to the public.
