

Students May Buy Microfilm Copies

For ten cents a sheet, students can now have for their own use a copy of material that is contained on microfilm stored in Pattee Library, Mrs. Margaret K. Spangler, assistant librarian, announced yesterday.

A page of microfilm can be reproduced onto an 8½" x 11" sheet of paper in eight seconds through the use of the Thermo-fax Reader-Printer, a machine recently purchased by the library.

Ag Faculty Hears Talks On Teaching

Official business was held to an unprecedented two minutes in yesterday's Agriculture faculty meeting. The rest of the meeting was allocated to representatives of the Division of Academic Research and Services and their talks on new developments in teaching.

Leslie Greenhill, associate director of DARS, told faculty members that there has been "a tremendous emphasis on research in instruction recently." The main reason, he said, was because of vast increases in the following five areas:

- Educational enrollments.
- Complexity of human knowledge.
- Cost of maintaining an institution.
- Public pressure.
- Available money for research projects.

The University's research in "programmed learning," a form of self-instruction, was the main topic of the talks.

The machine, which cost approximately $600, is located in a small room adjoining the periodicals room on the second floor. Requests to use the machine should be made at the periodicals desk and library assistants will make the prints.

The ten cents is charged to cover the costs of paper and the chemicals used to operate the machine.

The time needed to make a copy may vary from one to 30 seconds depending on the degree of lightness of the page being copied, according to Mrs. Spangler.

Most of the copy paper will be printed with white words on a black background since the microfilm is usually printed the opposite way—black words on white background. The copied page, though, is easy to read and will not fade.

Though the Reader-Printer can be used only with microfilm in making copies, the Pattee Library has on file about 8000 reels of film. Included in this collection are copies of early American and English periodicals, several newspapers, theses and the complete Adams family papers.

The library is acquiring more and more microfilm because it takes less storage space, is easier to handle and lasts longer than bound volumes, Mrs. Spangler said.

AEC Announces Loan to University

The Atomic Energy Commission announced yesterday that it will lend to the University without charge the enriched uranium contained in fuel and fission counters for the University's newly-acquired research reactor at Quehanna.

The Commission also announced that it will provide funds or services for reprocessing the spent fuel.

The reactor was acquired by gift last fall from the Curtiss-Wright Corporation of Woodridge, N.J.

Film to Show Navy Flights

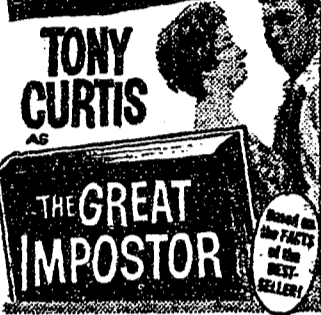

Colored movies, highlighting the Naval aviation program, will be shown at 7 p.m. Monday in 121 Sparks.
