

68 Women Drop Out Of Rushing

Sixty-eight women who registered for Formal Spring Rush have dropped out of rushing as of yesterday, Mrs. Nancy M. Vanderpool, assistant to the dean of women, announced.

There are 658 rushees continuing, she said.

The reasons most frequently given for discontinuing rushing this year have been the amount of time involved in participating and finances, Mrs. Vanderpool said.

Mrs. Vanderpool said 16 women dropped during and after open houses and 52 dropped after the first round of chatter dates. In spite of the increased number of women rushing this year, the number of drop-outs has not significantly increased when compared with last year, she added.

The location of the Panhellenic Post Office in the Hetzel Union Building this year appears to have made it easier for rushees to get their invitations sooner, Mrs. Vanderpool said. She said that in past years the post office did not have such a central location and rushees had difficulty returning invitations early enough to inform sororities of the number attending their chatter dates.

The second round of chatter dates will be held afternoons and evenings today and tomorrow.

Applications for Panhellenic Council offices will also be available at noon tomorrow at the HUB desk and the Panhellenic office, 129 Grange, Mrs. Vanderpool said. Cynthia Xanthopoulos, chairman of the Panhellenic Elections Committee, said the offices available are treasurer, recording secretary and corresponding secretary.

Each sorority may nominate one member for each office, and no sorority may hold the same office two years in succession, Miss Xanthopoulos added.

Nominees for the office of treasurer must be juniors, those for recording secretary must be sophomores and those for corresponding secretary may be either sophomores or juniors, she said. All nominees must hold a 2.5 All-University average, she said.

Applications must be turned in to the HUB desk or the Panhellenic office by March 3. Applicants will be notified of the time of their interviews.

Young Republicans Club Supports Budget Appeal

The Young Republicans Club has joined the growing number of organizations supporting President Walker's budget request.

In addition to this activity, the club will also attempt to get one of the leading Republicans in the nation to come to the University this semester to speak. Among those mentioned as possible speakers were New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller, former President Dwight D. Eisenhower, Sen. Barry L. Goldwater and former Vice President Richard M. Nixon.

McKinley Predicts Economic Conflict

By DAVE RUNKEL

President John F. Kennedy will be faced with the unique problem of severe unemployment coupled with a booming prosperity if the predictions of David H. McKinley, assistant dean of the College of Business Administration, prove accurate.

McKinley, speaking before the Young Republicans Club

Tuesday night, said that we reached the low point of the present economic decline last week.

McKinley further predicted that the nation's economy would be good in the second quarter of this year and even better in the third quarter. And by 1962, McKinley said, a big upswing will be in progress.

The current upswing will be led by government spending both in the defense and public construction areas, McKinley said.

McKinley explained the continuing unemployment as being the result of increased automation. He said that this problem will grow throughout most of the 60's.

Using his hometown of Uniontown (which is in a depressed area) as an example, McKinley said that the only way to solve the problem is to pull the young people out. He said that Uniontown will not get back on its feet economically until 30,000 leave that area. Nothing can be done for the older and uneducated people in the nation, he continued.

McKinley said that private and small businesses are feeling the pinch of the present slump but the larger industries have not decreased their capital expenditures (expenditures for new machinery and buildings) as is usual in a recession.

Looking at the immediate future, McKinley said that there will be more inflation during the Kennedy administration than there were in the Eisenhower years.

AWS Judicial Body Affects Many Coeds

Perhaps more women students are aware of the Association of Women Students judicial system than any other branch of women's government.

Records show that a high percentage of Penn State Women come in contact with Judicial during their college careers.

The reasons for judicial action range from sign-in, sign-out violations to serious cases of misconduct, according to Patricia Dyer, chairman of AWS Central Judicial Board.

Judicial was the first branch of AWS to be affected by the group's re-organization for residence community living.

In March 1960, the Women's Student Government Association, with the assistance of Dean of Women Dorothy J. Lipp, revised the long-standing list of rules and regulations for women students.

The same month the new code of ethics for Penn State women was initiated.

"However, the rules were not perfect in their original form," Miss Dyer said. "In essence they represented a tremendous improvement over anything seen before at the University, but they were difficult to follow. They left more to the responsibility and good judgement of the women; they were harder in this respect," she continued.

"But, these rules had to be tested and evaluated. To see them in practice was the best way for us to do this," he said.

The primary functions of Judicial are to review and evaluate standing rules and to hear cases on violations and then assign penalties, according to the AWS constitution.

"The board set out last spring to evaluate the rule and this process has continued this year," Miss Dyer said.

"The evaluation required much careful consideration. We had to be careful to give the women every opportunity and freedom they could handle and at the same time avoid any that could endanger their welfare," she said.

The black-mark system had been abolished and weekend campuses were eliminated.

The board began the tedious task of considering each case before them individually and prescribing individual penalties accordingly.

"For example two girls could have the same number of late minutes, but for entirely different reasons," Miss Dyer said.

"The case load for the board suddenly became overwhelming," she said.

"This was an indication that the women were taking advantage of their new freedom and abusing it," Miss Dyer said.

"But, the system was new and needed time before it could prove itself," she concluded.

Mrs. Marian Davison, assistant to the Dean of Women, agreed that the new rules needed time to prove themselves.
