

'Oh, Yes, the Football School,' Maple Room Boasts Prof Answers to 1920 Job Offer Low-Priced Meals

By ELLIE HUMMER

When the mathematics department discovered it was one instructor short in 1920, Dr. Teresa Cohen found herself on the faculty where she has since remained.

In relating her memories of the University to the Faculty Luncheon Club, Miss Cohen, professor of mathematics, remarked that all she knew about Penn State before coming here was its football reputation. Nevertheless, she accepted the urgent telegram asking her to come to the University and then tried to find out how to get here, she said.

As the first women in the math department, Miss Cohen said she was made to feel like a nine-day wonder. The few women on the faculty at that time were mostly in home economics. According to Miss Cohen, the math department only took a woman because they couldn't get anyone else.

The big social affair of the year for the faculty was the annual President's reception. The first reception was held at the University Club and grew until the last one, given by President Milton Eisenhower, had to be conducted in four shifts in Waring Lounge, she said.

Registration for classes was not as efficient in those days as it is today, Miss Cohen said. If a course required more than one section, all the people met in one large room the first day and were then divided into sections.

When Miss Cohen first started teaching, the periods were 45 minutes long and there were no 8 o'clock classes because of compulsory chapel. Saturday and evening final exams were also unknown, but each final lasted three hours, she said.

It required more work for a teacher to report grades in those days than now, she said. In addition to all the grade sheets required by the different deans, the scholarship chairmen in each fraternity needed grade reports.

The customs which are imposed on freshmen today are only a pale reflection of what they used to be, she said. Because freshman customs lasted until the last final exam, it was not strange to see students bring a hat to the final so they could replace their dink as soon as the final ended.

A complete meal for 18 cents? Where? In the Maple Room of the home economics building—20 years ago, that is. But, well-balanced, reasonably-priced meals are still served every week in both the Maple Room and cafeteria.

The Maple Room, opened in 1938, got its name from the original decor of the dining room, maple furniture. In 1952, the room was remodeled and painted in blue-green.

It was refurbished with blonde maple furniture. The ceiling was also lowered and some equipment was replaced in the kitchen at that time. The cafeteria was redecorated in coral shades.

A main dish which consists of a vegetable, salad, beverage and bread are served for 60 to 80 cents in the cafeteria.

The cafeteria is open from 11:50 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Tuesday through Friday, and the Maple Room is open from 5:30 p.m. to 6:30 p.m. Wednesday and Thursday. The food is prepared and served by students who are taking courses in hotel and institutional administration in quantity food service.

"The purpose of the food service is to provide an outlet for classes in quantity cookery," Miss Alma McDougall, assistant professor of hotel administration, said. She added that the food service conforms to the class schedule.

Werboff Fund To Aid Library

A fund has been established in the name of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Werboff to buy children's books for the Schlow Memorial Library.

Mrs. Ruth Kazey, State College, started the fund in honor of Lawrence Werboff, associate professor of economics, and his wife Barbara, who were killed in an automobile accident Jan. 30.

Contributions should be made out in care of the library, Mrs. Kazey said. For additional information call AD 8-6036.

Home Ec Society Elections

Phi Upsilon Omicron, home economics honorary society, elected officers at its last meeting.

The new officers are Karlyn Shoemaker, president; Brenda Mannear, vice president; Susan Brown, treasurer.

Rush, Kites, Coffee Fill Springlike Days

Well, now that sorority rushing is over, I guess everything will be getting back to normal with the coeds. For us professors, however, the confusion is just beginning because we have to grade all the neglected homework which will start coming in two weeks late.

I notice by the calendar for the 1961-62 terms that the administration is going to give us all of Sunday off for Easter recess. I didn't realize that there were going to be Sunday classes next year.

Embarrassed is what one economics professor was when he tried to smoke the piece of chalk he was holding in his hand.

Overheard Saturday night in a crowded section of the bleachers at Rec Hall: "My legs, too bad that I have them." The person said this as he tried to find a little leg room.

Proof that spring is here was seen Sunday in the West Halls Quadrangle as several boys tried to fly a kite. Well, if it isn't Fris-bies, it might as well be kites.

Two coeds have become fed up with the dining room coffee and have taken matters into their own hands. They bring a jar of instant coffee with them and mix it in a cup of hot water.

Recent events at the University have received quite a bit of attention in other school papers. The Northwestern paper, for example, used a note on the suspension of the AWS meetings and why such action was taken.

It was very gratifying to see Rutgers basketball coach Toni Kault walk to the Lion bench to congratulate Mark DuMars when he left the game with a few seconds left on Saturday night.

It doesn't seem possible but seniors begin ordering their caps and gowns in less than two weeks.

Higher Education. In a speech to the conference yesterday, he proposed six ways in which colleges and universities could give strong and immediate backing to the corps.

He said that the institutions of higher learning should:

• Ask the government for an opportunity to take part in the planning and fashioning of the corps.

• Make facilities available to train Peace Corps personnel.

• Seek and support the transfer of obsolete overseas military installations for use by the corps.

• Provide leaves for faculty personnel to help staff the program overseas.

• Give top priority to improved education for public service and responsibility.

• Pledge support for Peace Corps objectives.

According to a report presented to President Kennedy earlier this week by Director Shriver, there are now 57 universities working on development or educational projects with the International Cooperation Association in 37 countries.

"While few, if any, of these contracts presently meet the criteria of the Peace Corps," the report says, "they demonstrate the possibilities."

ident pro tem, said she would like to see more social functions for the independent women with independent and fraternity men. "I was hoping that socials with fraternities could be set up for interested independent women," she said. She suggested that Leonides could perhaps act as a central registry for interested fraternities. Leonides could then give the names to the community councils and let them sponsor the social functions.

Float, Carnival Deadlines Extended

The deadline for submitting category applications for the Spring Week float parade has been extended until tomorrow night, Robert Polishook, co-chairman of the float committee, said last night.

The deadline for entering the carnival is Friday. Applications are available at the HUB desk.

Tents for use on carnival stands will be provided by the carnival committee, Skip Berents, co-chairman of the carnival committee, said last night. Additional information about the tents will be sent to groups participating in Spring Week, he said.
