

DOC Offers Varied Counseling Program

(First of a series)

No other university in the country offers the services provided by the Division of Counseling.

The division, organized in 1955, is unique in that it is not like a college because it has no courses that students must take, according to Dr. Donald Ford, director.

The Division of Counseling has many services which are available to all undergraduate and graduate students.

Career counseling, which is for students who are undecided on their career choice, helps in appraising talents and interests with a view towards suggesting possible careers, Ford explained.

Educational counseling helps students who have selected a curriculum, but are having difficulty in doing their best work. If they are discouraged or not doing well in a subject, through consultation with personnel in the division some are able to discover and overcome the causes behind these difficulties, Ford said.

For students with personal worries and emotional problems, the personal counseling or psychotherapy section is available, he said.

The division maintains an extensive file of information on a variety of careers, and information on all accredited colleges and universities in the United States. This file is available to help students choose careers and appropriate curricula.
