

More Coeds Participate In Rushing

Seven women who did not register for formal spring rush because of deferred or changed grades registered for Panhellenic Council open bidding, Mrs. Nancy M. Vanderpool, assistant to the dean of women, said yesterday.

The seven were permitted to register by a ruling of Panhellenic Council Tuesday that all sophomore and junior women who were prevented from rushing because of deferred grades be allowed to participate in open bidding.

The total number of women eligible for open bidding is now approximately 297, Mrs. Vanderpool said. Sororities will receive a list of their names on Monday.

Open bidding will begin on Monday and continue until April 14, according to Marcia Hamm, Panhellenic rush chairman. She said 18 sororities will be participating.

Two guides will be available during this period to advise rushees on any problems they have concerning open bidding, Miss Hamm said. They are Ellen Valdimier and Elizabeth Avery. Rushees may reach them by telephone. Miss Hamm said that she and Janet Carlisle, assistant Panhellenic rush chairman, will be willing to answer questions.

Contact between sorority women and rushees is unlimited during the open bidding period, Miss Hamm said. She explained that sorority women are allowed to make telephone calls and visits to rushees' rooms.

Chatter dates and coke dates are also permitted, and sorority women will be allowed to pay for rushees' refreshments on a coke date if the bill does not exceed 25 cents.

However, she said sororities are prohibited from presenting planned entertainment or serving refreshments to rushees.

Any sorority issuing an open bid must notify the Panhellenic office at the time the bid is extended, Miss Hamm said.

Rushees receiving bids have one week to reply in writing to the Panhellenic Office.

Salary Survey to Be Reported

The findings of the recent faculty salary survey taken by the local chapter of the American Association of University Professors will be reported at 7:30 p.m. Monday in the Mineral Sciences Auditorium.

The meeting is open to members of the chapter and all other members of the University faculty.

R. Wallace Brewster, professor of political science and chairman of the AAUP committee on salaries and tenure, said that almost 75 per cent of the faculty have returned anonymous questionnaires, listing their rank and annual salary.

Brewster said that the returns indicate wide variations in salaries for each rank and much overlapping of ranks.

He explained that the maximum salary for instructors appears to be higher than the minimum for full professors. Among professors and associate professors, he said, the highest paid faculty members receive salaries more than double those of the lowest paid persons.

Brewster said that averages, minimums and maximums for each rank have been sent to national headquarters of the AAUP in Washington.

Each year the AAUP uses the data to determine ratings for salary levels of colleges and universities throughout the country.

It is customary for the administrations of the various institutions to submit the necessary data to the National AAUP. Since the University administration has declined to do this in the past two years, the local AAUP has gathered the information to send this year.

Penn State has not been rated since 1958-59 when it received a rating of "D" on a double "A" to "F" scale.

According to that rating, full (Continued on page twelve)
