

Chekov's 'Three Sisters' To Open at Centre Stage

By ANN PALMER

The Penn State Players will begin a six-week run of Anton Chekhov's classic drama, "The Three Sisters" on Friday night at Center Stage.

The play will run every weekend until May 20 and will be directed by Warren Smith, who has been associated with the Mateer Playhouse at Standing Stone for several years.

Dennis' Duties Taken by Cutler, Staff Members

Duties have been reassigned in the department of academic affairs because of the six month leave of absence granted to Lawrence E. Dennis to serve in the Peace Corps, Wilmer E. Kenworthy, executive assistant to the President, said Monday.

Responsibilities formerly held by Dennis, who was vice president for academic affairs, and Dr. Howard Cutler, newly named assistant to the President for academic affairs, will be divided among Cutler and other staff members, Kenworthy said. Committee responsibilities will be assigned to vice-chairman and other committee members.

Dr. Paul M. Althouse, assistant director of resident instruction in the College of Agriculture has been named acting director of General Education. Althouse has served as an assistant to Cutler in the area of general education.

C. R. Carpenter, director of the division of academic research and services will represent the president on all committees and projects concerned with television and radio.

R. B. Dickerson, associate dean and director of resident instruction in the College of Agriculture will be chairman of the administrative committee on resident education procedures.

Ben Euwema, dean of the College of the Liberal Arts, will be chairman of the policy committee for the Center of Continuing Liberal Education.

Other assignments will be made as the new positions develop, Kenworthy said.

Ulsh States Dress Policy For N. Halls

In order to be admitted to Warnock Dining Hall, from now on, residents of the North Halls area must be dressed neatly and presentably, Wayne Ulsh, president of North Halls Council, said Monday night at a council meeting.

The Dress Code, which stated rules for dining hall dress and the enforcement of them was made up by the council. At a popular election the men of the area voted to do away with this code, mainly because of a clause banning dungarees at all meals.

Dining hall dress will now be according to the rules stated in the pamphlet distributed by the Dean of Men's Office, "Guide to Residence Hall Living."

According to this publication, dress must be neat and presentable. Dungarees may be worn to meals except on Sundays. Coats and ties are requested, but not required, for Sunday noon meals.

The Dean of Men's office will enforce these rules.

It was rumored that the council had met Saturday to discuss the Dress Code further, but this rumor is false, Ulsh said.

In other business, Ulsh announced that new officers will be elected by council members at the next meeting, April 24.

Petitions for those who are running for office should be turned in to Ulsh by April 20 with at least 50 valid signatures on them.

Early Art Mirrors Spirit of America

Post-Revolutionary art reflects the spirit of its period, Dr. Harold Dickson, professor of the history of art and architecture, said at the Liberal Arts Lecture Series last night.

By this statement, Dickson was illustrating a thesis, that in the period after the Revolutionary War, from the time of George Washington to Andrew Jackson American art was unusually sensitive and responsive to the times. Neither before nor after this period was art so attuned to what was happening politically and socially.

By use of a collection of color slides received at the University last year, he was able to present to his audience what this meant. These slides are a few of the 2500 purchased from over 4000 other slides on American art assembled by the Carnegie Foundation.

This new art dealt with history in the making, continued Dickson, and it found a fertile field in the United States. The formulation of political parties launched art on a basic theme. With the use of the ballot becoming more widespread, paintings began to depict the growing interest of the people in politics, Dickson said.

Before 1800, he continued, portrait painting was so popular, that there existed what could be called "a population explosion of portraiture." Painters concentrated their efforts on statesmen, with Washington "running like a theme song" throughout the era.

Changes in the painters' themes coincided with changes in America herself. These men have left us with a clear picture of what America was like almost two centuries ago plus a conception of the pride imbued in the people in their newly founded nation, Dickson concluded.
