

Party Spending Limited During Spring Campaign

Political parties on campus will be allowed to spend only $12 in campaigning this spring, according to the amended elections code, Robert Dufner, chairman of the elections commission said last night.

The amendment passed last fall by SGA turned all publicity for the campaign over to the elections commission and limited party expenditures to such incidents as stationery, Dufner said.

Under the code a political clique may collect a maximum of $3 from each person running for office. But the bill specifically outlaws these cliques from using this money for commercial publicity, Dufner explained. It may only be used for incidentals, he added.

Dufner said that the term clique can be interpreted to include candidates running without a party endorsement.

For campaign management and publicity, the elections commission said.
