

WHITE CALF: Everyone's feeling "springy" including this frolicking albino calf in the University fields. An albino calf is not as unusual as one would think, according to University officials. In fact, there are two of them among the herds on campus.

Livestock Show To Set Record

The largest number of animals ever shown at a University exposition will be exhibited at the 44th Little International, according to John Novak, publicity chairman of the Block and Bridle Club which sponsors the exposition. A total of 104 cattle, sheep, horses and hogs will be exhibited at the Livestock Pavilion on April 29. These animals will be groomed, fitted and shown by students interested in the animals sciences and in the handling and care of livestock.

Prizes will be awarded to the champion of each species on the basis of showmanship and grooming. The highest award will be given to the Grand Champion Showman of all four species. The prizes will be awarded after the show at a banquet in the Hetzel Union.

Western style square dancing, a sheep dog demonstration, and a milking contest will be features of the exposition.

Bookstore Survey--

The entire report will be submitted to the Board of Trustees at either their June or July meeting, Steinhauer said. The trustees requested that a report on the need for a bookstore be presented to them at their June meeting.

WDFM Debate--

Alexander also said that Air Force has under consideration a plan to eliminate compulsory ROTC. He said he would urge students to make their feeling known on this matter.

In answer to a question submitted by a listener about control of the Book Exchange by three fraternities, Harrison said that anyone is eligible to join.

3-Year-Old Applies For '75 Admission

By BETSY MULCEY

High school students heeding warnings of stiff competition are applying earlier for college admission these days. Sherman Stanford, associate dean of admissions, was surprised, however, when he recently received an application for the September 1975 term.

A three-year-old Philadelphia area boy returned his application complete except for course and grade information.

A question asking the reason for making application to the University was answered with the maturity typical of a much older applicant.

The applicant wrote: "I believe a liberal education develops a sense of right, duty and honor. More and more in the modern world, big business rests on honor and character as well as good judgment. This character I hope to attain at Penn State because of its emphasis on the liberal arts and development of character."

Commenting on an enclosed photograph of the applicant, Stanford wrote the candidate: "From the Penn State sweatshirt I conclude you will be a loyal Penn Stater. Your expression tells me you will be a happy, cooperative student. The set of your shoulders and jaw lead us to believe that you may be a good athletic prospect."

Stanford went on to explain that action on this application will be delayed to permit sufficient time for the boy to complete his high school studies.

"I feel certain from the far-sighted view you have in respect to educational objectives," Stanford wrote the boy, "that you will understand our need to use our already bulging file space for current applications."

The influx of applications to the admissions office indicates that over 20,000 students are interested in coming to Penn State next year, Stanford said. At present there is room for 6,000 students at all the campuses in all the programs, he added.
