

Jazz Mass Planned By Lutherans

One of the recent attempts to modernize church liturgy will be presented in a twentieth century folk mass at 6:30 p.m. tomorrow in the Lutheran Student Center, 412 W. College Ave.

This "jazz mass," as it has come to be known, was written several years ago by an Anglican clergyman, Geoffrey Beaumont from Camberwell, England.

In Beaumont's arrangement of the mass, no organ is used, but rather a combo of piano, guitar, saxophone, clarinet, trumpet, bass viola, drums and trombone. The tempo of the music ranges from beguine dance rhythm, to waltz time, to a strong swinging four-four beat.

A cantor leads the service and the congregation participates, responding to the words of the cantor, and sometimes joining him in the singing of "hymns."

To many people the music of the church was foreign and not understood, Beaumont said. Until his "folk mass" was written about ten years ago, he said, there had not been a new church music setting since Elizabethan times.

He used the phrase "folk mass" because his music was the normal, everyday popular music of the majority of the people of the time.

"What we know as 'church' music today—the plainsong, the chant—were the familiar types of music in the early days of the church," Rev. Arthur R. Seyda, Lutheran campus pastor said. "Luther used secular music to get the people singing," he said.

185 Ask to Study Abroad

Approximately 185 students have submitted provisional applications for the Study Abroad Program, Dr. Dagobert de Levie, newly appointed director of the program announced this week.

The study is sponsored by the College of the Liberal Arts and is open to students in all the colleges of the University.

The "elected study" part of the program will enable a selected number of students to study abroad for a 10-week term as registered University students.

A "specialized study" is available for those students who wish to take a leave of absence from the University and study at a foreign university of their choice.

"We hope that the experience these students get will ultimately add to the intellectual climate of this campus and will broaden the students' understanding of world affairs," de Levie said.

Provisional applications are still available in 4 Sparks and 138 Sparks, he said. May 1 is the official deadline for submitting applications. Information concerning the program may be obtained in his office, 4 Sparks.
