

Sixty-eight Alumni Chapters Scattered Through U.S.

RIP ENGLE, head football coach, was honored by the Alumni Club of Allegheny County after his winning 1960 season, climaxed with the Liberty Bowl romp over Oregon. District alumni clubs often host University personalities.

A total of 68 district Alumni Clubs chartered by the Alumni Association are scattered throughout the nation according to the latest listing of the clubs in the "Alumni News."

The clubs seek to bring together Penn Staters both to serve their own interests and to benefit the school, according to Mary Neilly managing editor of the "Alumni News."

They also sponsor individual scholarships and awards for University students, she added. The individual clubs have an average of two meetings a year. Features of these meetings are speeches given by faculty members or administration officials, Mrs. Neilly said. She added that some of the larger clubs sponsor concerts by the Blue Band or glee club for local entertainment.

Most of the alumni clubs do not have membership dues or fees, Mrs. Neilly said, although, she continued, some of them do charge a modest fee for participation in club activities.

Mrs. Neilly said that any function sponsored by the club must be paid for by the admission fee, club funds are rarely used for this purpose.

Some of the clubs publish periodical newsletters or bulletins for reading by club members. Any publication sponsored by an individual alumni club is printed on campus after the material is forwarded by the club officers, Mrs. Neilly said.

All of the clubs, while chartered by the Alumni Association which is headquartered on campus, are governed locally, Mrs. Neilly said.

Most of the clubs are in Pennsylvania. However there are 26 out-of-state clubs scattered from southern California to Boston, Massachusetts. One of the clubs is located in Puerto Rico. The list of clubs is published on the back cover of each issue of the "Alumni News."

Walker Discusses Role of Graduates

By DR. ERIC A. WALKER
In my charge to the graduates at commencement last June, I outlined what seemed to me to be the fundamental relationship between an alumnus and the institution from which he was graduated.

"The degrees you have received," I told those graduates, "certify to the world at large that you are now alumni of the Pennsylvania State University."

This ceremony does not mark the severance of your ties with the University. It marks, rather, the beginning of your full participation as members of the Penn State family.

"The University consists not entirely of the faculty, nor of the campus and the buildings on it, not even of the students who are in residence at any one time. It consists of all these, but it also consists of all who have entered the University and then gone forth from her as centers of her influence and as promoters of her spirit.

"As with those who have gone forth before you, you are now a part of Penn State, and she is a part of you. Wherever you work, there the University will be at work. Whatever you do, Penn State will be reflected in your accomplishments, in your successes, and in your triumphs.

"Wherever you make your homes, you will be Penn State to your neighbors, friends and fellow workers. Through the very lives you lead, as well as through your continued interest in and devotion to your ALMA MATER, you will be creating an image of Penn State.

"As you leave the University to take your places in the world of affairs, I strongly urge you to continue your active association with Penn State through the Alumni Association. Both you and the University will continue to profit from the mutual guidance, support, and help that you can give each other. Good luck and best wishes!"

Dairy Exposition Food Conferences

Dairy science students will continue their 36th annual exposition with cattle fitting and showing in the livestock pavilion Sunday.

The all-around champion award will be given to the student who excels in both fitting and showing.

The exposition queen, Margaret Morrow, freshman in home economics from Tyrone, will be presented at the awards banquet Sunday night.

This year's show is dedicated to Paul S. Williams, professor in the dairy science department for 40 years and founder of the original dairy club in 1919.

Foundation Gives Prof European Fellowship

Dr. Raymond G. D. Ayoub, professor of mathematics, has been awarded an Organization of European Economic Cooperation senior visiting fellowship, the National Science Foundation announced recently.

These fellowships of which about 25 were granted this year, are designed to enable senior scientific personnel to study scientific developments in countries comprising the Organization of European Economic Cooperation.

Alum College Offers Summer Courses

By NICKI WOLFORD, '61

To graduating seniors, who have been complaining about the "isolated" campus for four years, the idea of spending a vacation here must seem absurd.

Yet since 1959, several hundred alumni have spent all or part of their summer vacations at the University attending the Alumni College.

The college is co-sponsored by the Penn State Alumni Association and the University's Center for Continuing Liberal Education. Sessions of the college are held in the spring, fall and summer. Mary S. Neilly, managing editor of the Alumni News, said that the spring and fall sessions are usually held on weekends.

Last summer the University held two one-week sessions, and this summer is expanding the program to five one-week sessions.

Three courses of study and discussion will be offered during each week the college is in session. The courses will be:

July 9-14 — Modern Fiction, American Foreign Policy and Great Issues in American History; July 16-21 — The Ways of Mankind, the Responsible Man, and Looking at Modern Painting; July 23-28 — Case Studies in American Politics, Introduction to the Humanities, and Foreign Economic Policy.

July 30-Aug. 4 — The Mass Media in America, Great Modern Short Stories, and Attending the Theatre; Aug. 8-12 — American Civilization Today, Discovering Modern Poetry, and Russian Foreign Policy.

The director of the program, Dr.

Prof Will Talk at Banquet

Dr. Martin Weinberger, professor of art and architectural history, will deliver the address at the annual initiation and banquet of the Penn State chapter of Phi Beta Kappa on Wednesday, May 17, at the Nittany Lion Inn. He will speak on "The Art of Rembrandt."

Cyril F. Hager, is the director of the Center for Continuing Liberal Education and assistant dean of the College of the Liberal Arts.

Other faculty members are Dr. Ralph W. Condee, the CCLE's assistant director for Humanities, Warren Smith, professor of Theatre arts and director of the Penn State Players, Dr. Robert W. Iversen, CCLE's director for social sciences.

Sol Davidson, class of 1940, is the only alum on the staff. He has studied at New York University's Fine Arts Institute and is managing editor of "Art Digest."

In addition to the regular courses offered, alumni may take a special course in which the mechanics of effective discussion-leadership will be demonstrated and discussed. The purpose of the course is to prepare those alumni who are interested in initiating study groups in their own communities.

Physics Department Gets $3,000 Research Grant

The Department of Physics has received a $3,000 grant-in-aid from the Chemstrand Research Center, Inc., of the Chemstrand Corporation, Durham, N.C., in continued support of research in high polymer physics.

The research is under the direction of Dr. John A. Sauer, professor and head of the Department of Physics. The grant has been awarded for the third consecutive year.

Roy to Attend Colloquium

Dr. Rustum Roy, professor of geochemistry has been invited by the Centre National de Recherche Scientifique of the French Government to attend one of its international colloquia this summer. The colloquium will be held in Paris from July 3-7 and will be concerned with the topic, "Synthesis and Genesis of Clays."
