

Scientists To Speak At Institute

Leading scientists from the United States and abroad will participate in an advanced study institute on Underwater Acoustics to be sponsored by the University this summer.

The institute, which will be conducted from July 31 to Aug. 11, will be held at Imperial College of the University of London, England, under the auspices of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Dr. Vernon M. Albers, chief scientist at the Ordnance Research Laboratory and Dr. R. W. B. Stephens, of Imperial College are serving as co-chairman of the institute.

Albers said that approximately 16 speakers will participate in the institute. Among the lecturers are Dr. Paul M. Kendig and Dr. Eugene J. Skudruzyk, professors of engineering research at the Ordnance Research Laboratory.

Other countries that will be represented by speakers include Canada and England, Albers said.

Topics for discussion will include oceanography, velocity of sound, sound transmission and turbulent flow, Albers said.

Coordinating the institute's operation is Dr. Virgil Neilly, head of the Department of Continuing Education in Engineering.

Neilly said the institute was proposed by the University as a means of disseminating information on the subject of underwater acoustics.

Under the NATO summer schools program started in 1959, schools are given grants to conduct international meetings on scientific topics for two to six weeks, Neilly said.

Many times the research being conducted overlaps between countries because of a lack of communication, Neilly said.

The aim of the institute is to develop better understanding of the present situation, develop suggestions for future research and develop more communication between the participants in the future.

The University has received a $24,000 grant for the institute.

WIND AND RAIN swept campus yesterday catching many students without raincoats or umbrellas. One brave boy tried to run from Willard to Thompson but ended up soaking wet. The rain came down so hard that the visibility was nearly zero.

Gale Force Wind Puts Car in Orbit

This business one sees in the movies about flying Model "T's" may be catching on in State College.

A startled student looked out the window during the height of yesterday's "tornado" to see his Model "A" roadster gliding serenely across the parking lot.

Evidently the 86 mile-an-hour gale force wind had torn loose one of the wooden top supports which smashed against the emergency brake handle "preparing the car for flight."

"The thing really looked serious about taking off," the student reported, "the top was billowing into a sail, and the hood was flapping in the wind like a pair of prehistoric wings."

Luckily (?) the top ripped off just as the errant automobile "zeroed in" on a collision course with another car.

Old West to Arrive With Players Show

By BARBARA BROWN

The strange young men currently seen on campus with beards, mustaches and long, curling hair are not really beat-nicks, nor are they just too lazy to make a trip to the barber shop. They are just members of the cast of the Penn State Players upcoming production of "Paint Your Wagon."

Tickets are still available at the Hetzel Union desk for performance at 8 p.m. tomorrow, Friday, and Saturday in Schwab.

The men with curly, long hair play citizens of the Old West town of Rumson, founded by Ben Rumson who discovered gold there. The show's plot revolves about Rumson's efforts to keep the town alive, Ellis Grove, director, explained.

The Lerner and Loewe play concerns people who live in the town such as Rumson's daughter, Jennifer, played by Sandra Hart; a young Mexican, Julio, played by Bob Valenty; and Rumson himself, played by Joe Servello, Grove said.

"All the characters are out of the Old West — a saloon keeper, a Mormon covey of wives, a gambling man and various miners — both good and bad," he said.

"This is a man's show. It is about men, how they think and what they do," Grove said. "It is very rowdy and robust in many ways," he said, adding, "There's much bar room activity and although it is a Western, not one gun is fired."

"Paint Your Wagon" is not a musical comedy but a play with music. The accent is on the story and not the song, Grove continued.

The 35 member cast is one of the largest of any Player production, Grove said.

Robert Reifsnider, assistant professor in theatre arts, devised and executed the choreography for "Paint Your Wagon."

Russell Whaley, assistant professor of theatre arts, is the set designer, David Weinerth, junior in arts and letters, is the musical director, and Rip Reynolds is the play's technical director.
