

75 Students Brewster Comments May Study On 'First 100 Days' In Europe

Approximately 75 students have been tentatively selected to study at French and German universities under the College of the Liberal Arts Study Abroad Program, Dr. Dagobert de Levie, program director, said yesterday.

The Study Abroad Program is divided into an elective plan and a specialized plan. The elective plan allows a student to study at a foreign university for one ten-week term as a registered University student.

Under the specialized plan a student may take a leave of absence from the University to study at any foreign university of his choice.

Negotiations are now under way to establish the elective study plan in French and German universities for the 1962 spring term, de Levie said.

"It is hoped that a study program in the Spanish language area can be set up in either Spain or in one of the Latin American countries during the 1962-63 academic year," he said.

Those students already tentatively chosen will receive notification within the next few days, de Levie said. "Priority of selection was given to students who will be seniors or juniors next year, who have a high All-University average and who have facility in either German or French," he added.

The Liberal Arts Committee on Study Abroad will continue to select applicants and will notify them at a later date, de Levie said. "Those students who have not yet filled a provisional application and wish to participate in the study abroad program are urged to do so without delay," he added.

The program is open to all students and will include courses in the humanities, the social sciences and the fine arts or theater arts.

Applicants not chosen for the 1962 spring term program will automatically be considered for the following year, de Levie said. He said these students should check regularly with him for additional information.

Liberal party is also developing a campaign against a general deposit to be required of all students in the fall term, Miss Harris said. This single fee will incorporate all other separate deposits now paid. The deposit, minus deductions for loss or damage, will be refunded when the student leaves the University.

By DAVE RUNKEL
(This is the second of a series of articles examining the views of political science professors concerning the first 100 days of the Kennedy administration.)

President Kennedy's first 100 days in office were certainly less dramatic than the famous 100 days of Franklin Roosevelt's first administration in 1933, R. Wallace Brewster, professor of political science, said yesterday.

There are two reasons for this, Brewster said.

One, the circumstances were less dramatic this year than they were in 1933. Second, the contrasts between Roosevelt and Hoover were much greater than the contrasts between Kennedy and Eisenhower.

Kennedy has pushed hard on the domestic progress he proposed in the campaign, Brewster said.

"By and large he has been successful in this field having some proposals enacted into laws and the remainder under action in Congress," he said.

Kennedy's bill for federal aid to education looks like it is going to be passed, Brewster said.

He explained that Rep. Adam Clayton Powell, D-N.Y., has agreed not to put an anti-segregation rider on the bill and the hierarchy of the Roman Catholic church has apparently agreed to a separate bill for private schools.

The field of foreign affairs during Kennedy's first 100 days has been marked by some rather stirring but strong commitments, Brewster said.

In Laos, Kennedy seemed to reflect more concern about the rebels than was indicated by the Laotian government itself, he said.

"We can hope that some way may be found in the present talks which will make it unnecessary to save face by using military force," Brewster said.

As for Cuba, he said, perhaps Kennedy has learned a lesson not to depend on governmental agencies that are not accountable to either Congress or the public as he did with the super-secret Central Intelligence Agency during the Cuban incident.
