23 Fawns Coming Here

By Don Macalady

Animal lovers on campus who want to get a close look at a fine group of fawns will get their chance in a few weeks.

The University, through the Department of Animal Nutrition, has recently begun another detailed study of whitetail deer. For this purpose 23 fawns have been received by the department. They are presently being housed in one of the sheep barns in anticipation of the completion of permanent facilities for them in two or three weeks.

After the facilities are completed, the public will be permitted to view the deer. Their pens are being built on farm No. 3, near New Beaver Stadium.

According to Dr. Robert Cowan, associate professor of animal nutrition, the original objective of deer studies was to study nutritional effects on the size of the deer's antlers. The program, however, has developed to the extent that the study now includes general nutritional effects and the testing of does with regard to the effect of nutrition on the production of fawns.

For those fishermen who prefer to use live bait for bass, I've received several comments about baits which have been bringing results in area bass streams.

The most effective bait seems to have been the hellgrammite, especially when used in the Juniata River. It's best to use on small shot about a foot above the hook, while hooking the bait through the collar. Be sure and keep the bait down, as a hellgrammite at mid-depth will do you no good. Other fishermen have told me they've had good luck using minnows in much the same manner.

From all the reports I've heard, the bass fishing in general has continued to be pretty good. Catches seem to be running fairly large, again, especially in the upper Juniata River. A reminder: fishermen are now required to carry their licenses in plain view. This is a departure from former requirements, so be sure and comply with the change.

The hours for summer woodchuck hunting (July 1 to September 30) are 6 a.m. to 7:30 p.m. EST. This gives many an opportunity to hunt who could never get out during the standard hunting hours. After September 30, the time changes back to 7 a.m. to 5 p.m. EST.

Few groundhog hunters realize, I think, that more hunters are shot in mistake for a groundhog in Pennsylvania than for any other animal. The other day, while hunting near State College, I came upon a hunter, crawling on his hands and knees, with no hat on. He was "stalking" a woodchuck.

Only his head was above the grass. This fellow was really taking a chance. To someone 150 yards or so away, that bobbing head may look just like a chuck. Always wear a bright hat while hunting—especially when your hunting chucks.

After a spring of heavy rainfall and relatively cold weather, sportsmen in Pennsylvania have expressed some concern over the fate of the young of our wildlife. Special anxiety was felt by many concerning wild turkey broods.

Broods, however, seem to be large and healthy. District Game Protector Charles Laird reported seeing several fairly large sized broods in this general area. The chicks are about the size of a chicken now, and appear to be normal and healthy.

Laird also reported seeing a rather large black bear in the Pine Glen area. The rather scarce blackies are feeding on Juneberries now, and a sure sign of their presence are the broken down Juneberry bushes.
