PHILIPPINE PEACE CORPS GROUP GRADUATES: Thursday night was graduation night for 152 members of the Peace Corps who trained at the University for work in the Philippines. Carlos Romulo, center, Philippine Ambassador to the United States, was the main speaker. Miss Marjorie Pfankuch, a Peace Corps member from Menasha, Wis., was presented the graduation certificate for the class from Harris Wofford, special assistant to President Kennedy.

Romulo Cautions Corps At Graduation Banquet

Although Peace Corps representatives will receive a warm welcome in the Philippines, they will have personal difficulties to face as well as some resentments among the people, Gen. Carlos P. Romulo, Philippine ambassador to the United States, said Thursday.

"Our people are still fighting for rights that should have been given us," Romulo told 152 Peace Corps representatives honored at a graduation banquet in the Hetzel Union.

The group, which has just completed seven weeks of training at the University for duty in the Philippines, will spend the next year and a half serving as teacher's aides in English and science in Philippine elementary schools.

Romulo explained that the low standard of pay to soldiers and their dependents is one cause of resentment in the islands.

He also said that the Philippine people were once again disappointed last week when the House of Representatives for the 16th year in a row failed to pass a bill giving $73 million in war damage claims to the islands.

Romulo also told the volunteers that they are now "active participants in a task that means war or peace."

Although the volunteers are young and relatively inexperienced, Romulo said, "what we need in Asia and Africa is not age and dignity but friendliness and idealism."

In describing the group's mission, Romulo said, "You are not ambassadors to the Philippines. You are service men and women, there to give of yourselves to other people."

Also attending the banquet was Harris Wofford, special assistant to President Kennedy representing the President and R. Sargent Shriver, director of the Peace Corps.

Freshmen Hours

All freshmen women must be in their dormitories tonight through Thursday at least 15 minutes before their counseling session is scheduled to start.

On Friday and Saturday, freshmen women will have the same hours as upperclass women — 1 a.m. permissions.

Women may not entertain men in the dormitory lounges tonight or tomorrow night.

Cold Air Mass Brings Campus Cooler Weather

Scattered frost and near-freezing temperatures were observed in Pennsylvania last night as a huge mass of unseasonably cool air settled over the eastern United States.

This cool weather is in sharp contrast to the well-above normal temperatures that prevailed during the first two weeks of this month.

The mercury reached 89 degrees on Wednesday and Thursday.

Under the influence of the cool air mass pleasant weather is expected today through Tuesday. Afternoon temperatures should reach into the 70's under sunny skies, and nighttime reading should be mostly in the chilly 40's.

Registration Clarified for Frosh

Someone once said that "Forewarned is forearmed" and in no situation could this be truer than with registration.

When Wednesday, Thursday and Friday roll around, however, students, even you new ones, should have little trouble if you take some time now to understand the entire process.

First, you will see your advisers about courses you should schedule for this term and the next one. Schedule cards, known commonly as Number Two cards, must be filled out for both terms along with other cards which your adviser will give you.

Next you must know what day

Orientation Events Set

Arriving on campus today will be the class of '65 and several hundred new upperclassmen ready to begin a week of orientation activities.

Almost 5300 new students will participate in this orientation program. Of this number 3667 are freshmen and 1620 were admitted with advanced standing. There are 1666 new women students and 3621 men students.

Designed to acquaint the new students with Penn State, Orientation Week will consist of counseling, tests, tours, lectures and mixers.

The President's Convocation tomorrow morning in Recreation Hall will lead off the program. At this time all new students will be officially welcomed by President Eric A. Walker, Student Government Association President Dennis A. Foianini and other administration officials.

Tonight's optional program will consist of mixers and visits to the homes of faculty members. These events are being sponsored by student religious organizations.

The cheerleading squad will be on hand tomorrow night to teach Penn State's songs and cheers. These will be heard again this week at the pep rally Friday night and at the football game with Navy on Saturday.

Tuesday night is general information night with orientation counselors. For the women there will be a skit presented by AWS, ISA, and Panhel in Schwab Auditorium.

The nine colleges and the Division of Counseling will hold mixers for the new students Wednesday night.

The Greek life will be introduced to the men via a movie and discussion on fraternities Thursday night. The women will attend a program sponsored by the Women's Recreation Association.

Dink Debut and Class Night on Friday will climax Orientation Week activities as the freshman students don their dinks. Freshman customs will begin then for a minimum period of one week.

Also included in the orientation program are talks by six professors. A schedule of the time and place of the lectures may be found in the Orientation Booklet.

The speakers and their topics are "What is Man?" by Henry A. Finch, professor of philosophy; "Barndoor Britches and Shoo Fly Pie" by Maurice A. Mook, professor of anthropology; and "Time" (Continued on page thirty-one)

Campus Serenade

All members of the hat societies and orientation leaders will assemble at 10 tonight in front of the HUB for the traditional campus serenade.

Members of hat societies may pick up their hats this week in 202 HUB.

Final Reports, Banquet Conclude 10th Encampment

Student Government Encampment, a three-day meeting of student leaders, faculty members and administrators, ended yesterday with final reports and a concluding banquet.

More than 100 students and 24 faculty members and administrators attended the encampment, which was divided into six separate workshops.

Each workshop studied problems facing University students that fell within its jurisdiction and made recommendations for their solution.

The Evaluation of SGA Workshop concentrated on re-defining the authority, organization and philosophy of SGA.

One of the recommendations contrasts sharply with past SGA philosophy in stating that SGA should determine a limited governmental area where it can have "irrevocable" jurisdiction.

The Off-Campus Problems workshop made several recommendations to SGA aimed at improving sanitation, safety and health in town housing and the sanitation conditions in town eating establishments.

The workshop also called for the expansion of the book exchange to include all items that are essential to the education of the student such as books and supplies.

Recommendations of the Public Relations and Communication Workshop included a suggestion that SGA sponsor radio forums featuring student and administration leaders for the purpose of debating pertinent issues.

It was also recommended that the administration issue bulletin (Continued on page seven)

Hat Societies

A meeting of all hat society presidents and secretaries will be held at 9 tonight in 214 HUB.

Trustees Act To Postpone New Projects

Because of rising costs and the inability to obtain increased aid from the State, the University will undertake no new projects until its financial position is substantially improved, President Eric A. Walker said Thursday.

This is the second step in the University's self-styled austerity plan. The first step, a $15 per term tuition increase, will yield approximately $1 million per year, Walker said. This money will be used almost exclusively to close the competitive gap in faculty salaries between the University and other institutions.

This latest action was based on a Board of Trustees ruling which stated that "until the financial ability of the University to meet its normal operating expenses has been substantially improved . . . no new endeavors requiring additional money will be undertaken unless they are fully covered by additional money."

Walker said that the action means that pending proposals useful to Pennsylvania agriculture and industry will have to be postponed; proposed new continuing education programs will have to be shelved, and more and more Pennsylvania students will have to be turned away.

This is the first of three special orientation issues of the Daily Collegian. The remaining issues will be published Wednesday and Saturday. Regular daily publication will resume Tuesday, Sept. 26.
