

Miller Gives '61 Booters Needed Lift

With the season's opener with West Chester less than two weeks away, Penn State soccer coach Ken Hosterman is remaining silent about the potential of his 1961 booters.

Years of experience have taught the veteran Lion coach it is not healthy to predict the outcome of any given season.

The constant threat of injuries is one good reason for remaining silent.

During the last three years, when State's soccer fortunes have been on the decline, injuries have plagued the Lions unmercifully. In 1958 All-American Howie Maierhofer, the Lion captain, broke his leg before the season even started and did not play in one game. The following year the Lions lost their top scorer, another All-American, Bill Fiedler.

Last year there were no major injuries, but all through the season Hosterman was hampered by all sorts of "little" mishaps. Someone was always out of the lineup due to hindrances such as shin splints, sore insteps, twisted ankles, etc.

At one point early in the season, State played without the services of both regular fullbacks. Wayne Rodgers, last year's captain, did not even make the trip to West Chester, and John Miller was hampered by a charlie horse although he saw some action. West Chester, of course, ran all over State's defense, winning 5-0.

So while running his booters through their pre-season workouts, Hosterman remains silent, but with a hopeful smile brightening his face.

With Lion captain Miller it's a different story. The stocky senior fullback, who looks more like a defensive end, is optimistic about the 1961 season, and isn't afraid to say so.

Just as Hosterman is justified in remaining cautious, Miller has good reason to be optimistic. The play of the sophomores has been a help, there have been no serious injuries thus far, and there is no dissention on the State squad, as has been the case in the past.

The constant threat of being replaced by husling new faces

Ken Hosterman, Penn State's veteran soccer coach, gives pre-season workout instructions to fullback John Miller, the Lion's '61 captain.

*** keeps the veteran booters from becoming complacent. The sophomores are used to winning as a result of last year's undefeated freshman team.

There is competition for every post on the squad, even at goalie where the two senior veterans, Dave Grubbs and Jim Gottsch-ling, will have to battle for the starting position.

The one main deterrent in State's attempt to get ready for West Chester is the scheduling of classes. Many of the booters can not come out to practice on time, and some must miss days of practice due to scheduling problems.

Welterweight Champ Turns From Puncher to Slugger

NEW YORK (AP) — Emile Griffith has blossomed from a fair puncher to a knockout slugger in the past year.

In his two world welterweight title fights, the Virgin Island native has scored two knockouts. He won the crown by knocking out defender Benny (Kid) Paret of Cuba in the 13th round and stopped Mexico's Gaspar (Indian) Ortega in the 12th round last June 3.

On Saturday night, Griffith, 23, will give Paret a return title shot at Madison Square Garden in a television 15-rounder.

Prior to the two title fights, the always-top-conditioned Griffith had scored only seven kayos in 22 fights.

Both Paret and Ortega had been known for their ability to absorb a punch. Paret never had been floored before, and Ortega, who had fought the best welters and middleweights, never had been stopped.
