

THE DEMOLITION of a house, formerly used as a boarding house, on S. Pugh St. is the end of an abode steeped in the history of freshman customs. The house, known as "The Fort," was a boarding house when the class of 1899 was going through customs. A frosh who defied customs put up a stand against upperclassmen there who attacked the residence with a Civil War cannon.

Crews Destroy Site Of Hazing Legend

By DIANN RABE

The scene of an old campus legend is being demolished to make room for a parking lot on S. Pugh St.

A building, formerly used as a boarding house for Freshmen and called "the Fort," is vanishing along with its legend which concerns a freshman who refused to be hazed, a civil war cannon and members of the class of 1899. The Pugh St. residence gained a campus-wide reputation because of an unusual battle staged there.

It seems that a certain frosh, class of 1899, was not unlike some of the freshmen of today and resented the thought of hazing, or customs, as it is now called. He lived at this boarding house, then known as "Mr. Shivers' place," and openly defied the sophomores to haze him, threatening to put up a struggle with anyone who dared to try.

One morning at daybreak, a band of indignant sophomores crept up to the rooming house, dragging behind them a brass civil war cannon that had graced the grounds in front of the armory just an hour before.

Hurriedly, the students loaded the cannon with stones and rotten apples and attacked Mr. Shivers' rooming house. Luckily, the class fund paid for broken windows resulting from flying pebbles and apple cores.

From that day on, Mr. Shivers' establishment became known as "the Fort," the "Castle" and even "Fort Shivery." There is even a page, picture and poem dedicated to the immortality of "the Fort" in the 1906 edition of La Vie. Today we see that it was not immortal.

Does Your Memory Fail You?

A noted publisher in Chicago reports there is a simple technique for acquiring a powerful memory which can pay you real dividends in both business and social advancement and works like magic to give you added poise, necessary self-confidence and greater popularity.

According to this publisher, many people do not realize how much they could influence others simply by remembering accurately everything they see, hear, or read. Whether in business, at social functions or even in casual conversations with new acquaintances, there are ways in which you can dominate each situation by your ability to remember.

To acquaint the readers of this paper with the easy-to-follow rules for developing skill in remembering anything you choose to remember, the publishers have printed full details of their self-training methods in a new book, "Adventures in Memory," which will be mailed free to anyone who requests it. No obligation. Simply send your request to: Memory Studies, 835 Diversey Parkway, Dept. 3757, Chicago 14, Ill. A postcard will do.
