

Halls Named University Warned To Honor Pa. Counties Pollution Must Halt

The State Sanitary Water Board has given the University two years to build additional sewage treatment works or other facilities to prevent any further pollution of Spring Creek.

In an order signed yesterday by Charles L. Wilbar, Jr., State Secretary of Health, the University was told that it must stop its present discharge of treated sewage into Thompson Run, a tributary of Spring Creek. A spokesman for the board said that this did not mean that the University can no longer dump its sewage discharge into the creek, but only that facilities must be provided to end the pollution of the stream.

University officials acknowledged receipt of the order, but declined any comment.

The announcement grew out of a Sanitation Board hearing in August when the question of the University's sewage treatment plant and Spring Creek was reviewed.

This move followed quickly on the heels of an announcement last week by the General State Authority canceling the construction of a $500,000 addition to the present sewage plant. This addition was planned to alleviate pollution of the creek.

But the GSA said at that time that it had decided to stay out of the controversy now associated with the pollution of Spring Creek.

Presumably, this means that the University would have to pay for the correction of the sewage problem out of its own operating funds, or re-open the question with the GSA at a later time.

Spring Creek, is the site of a large state fish hatchery and of a nationally known trout fishing spot called "Fisherman's Paradise." The death of many fish at both places has been blamed on pollution caused by effluent from the University's sewage treatment plant.

A dedication ceremony was held yesterday for Armstrong House in East Halls A, marking the first of a series of 14 dedications in the two men's residence halls in the area. The dedications will honor Pennsylvania counties.

Attending the ceremony were 15 residents of Armstrong County, University officials and students from the house. President Eric A. Walker made the official dedication and W. Stuart Helm, state representative from Armstrong County, spoke on behalf of the citizens of the county.

A plaque with the county's name and pictures depicting historical county scenes were also dedicated.

Before attending the ceremony, the Armstrong County representatives were feted at a luncheon in the Nittany Lion Inn. Later, they were taken on a tour of the East Halls dining area by John Dombroski, director of personnel and training for food service.

Reed Ferguson, director of University relations, said all succeeding dedication ceremonies will follow the same procedure.

The practice of dedicating house units within men's residence halls to Pennsylvania counties was started two years ago with the completion of North Halls, Ferguson said.

Men's residence halls on campus, unlike the women's halls, are constructed with separate units so that a counselor can supervise a smaller group of students, he said. Fourteen houses were dedicated for counties in North Halls, and last year 16 houses were honored in Pollock Halls, Ferguson said.

Counties represented by the most students at the University are the first to be honored by the program, Ferguson said.

There are 94 students on the main campus from Armstrong County, Ferguson said, and 12 at the McKeesport Center. In addition, he said, 189 adults living in the county enrolled last year in special courses offered by the University.

The next dedication ceremony, honoring Bradford County, will take place Tuesday. Carbon County will be honored Wednesday, Ferguson said.

Grad Program to Begin 7th Year of Counseling

The graduate program in rehabilitation counseling will start its seventh year with a one-year $113,960 grant from the Office of Vocational Rehabilitation of the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

The program, which is offered in the Department of Educational Services headed by Franklin A. Miller, began in 1955. Kenneth W. Hylbert is its director.

SOPHOMORES, JUNIORS, SENIORS: DON'T TREAD ON FRESHMEN! They have been known to become employers. A freshman wants, above all, to be inaugurated into your world. Walk him to class, teach him longhand, explain how the Ph.D. wears his tassel, introduce him to Luckies (and tell him how college students smoke more Luckies than any other regular). You'll be a bigger man, and you'll be able to borrow Luckies from him any time.

CHANGE TO LUCKIES and get some taste for a change!
