Pitt Replaces 'Block P' Club

Pep was the problem for the Panthers at Pitt — there just didn't seem to be any. Students at the University of Pittsburgh found that the "Block P" similar to the Block S club at the University, was not receiving the necessary support from the student body.

Consequently, the "Block P" was disbanded last year and Pitt no longer has a flashcard section.

Student government groups studied the problem and decided to form a Pep Club to replace the "Block P."

It was hoped that the Pep Club would revive lagging spirit at Pitt football games.

The newly formed Pep Club will coordinate the activities among students, band and cheerleaders during the football games.

If the students do not participate in the Pep Club, the activities of the "Block P" will be resumed by the student government.
