

INSTANT CHRISTMAS, (Who Needs Thanksgiving Anyway?) So reads the sign under the Christmas-in-October tree "planted" by coeds in McElwain. Apparently discouraged by the prospect of turkey in the dorms, the girls decided to "brighten up" the Simmons-McElwain breezeway.

Honor Dorm Alters Sign-outs

The Delaware House in Runkle Hall has passed two new rules in their self-government experiment, Linda Goodman, president of Delaware House, announced last night. Miss Goodman said that Dean of Women Dorothy J. Lipp has approved the new rules.

These two rules consists of a change in the sign-out procedure and a "third persons responsibility system," Miss Goodman said.

The new sign-out system will replace the sign-out sheets that are used in the other residence halls, with two vertical files.

One file will contain a card for each of the 71 girls living in Delaware House; the other will be empty. When a girl wishes to leave the residence hall she will put her name and where she is going on her card and transfer it to the empty file. It will not be necessary for the girl to put the time that she is leaving the hall on the card as has been the policy in the past.

When she returns to the dorm she will put her card back in the original file, and unless she returns at closing hours it will not be necessary to put the time she returned on the card.

"The "third person responsibility system," the second rule be put into effect. This rule permits a woman to go to Warnock Dining Hall to get something to eat before 11 p.m. without signing out. The only circumstances under which she will have to sign out to go to Warnock are if she goes after 11 p.m. or if she intends to stay there past that time.

On this night the girl must come in a half-hour early and perform the jobs that the senior resident does in other residence halls at closing time.

Under this new system, the duty girl, seeing one of the other girls come in without having signed out, will not report the offender but will ask the girl to report herself within the next week.

These two rule will be put into effect immediately. The Delaware House women passed another rule that they may spread throughout which will have to be approved by the AWS Senate before it can system.

In commenting on these new rules, Dean Lipp said that this experimental living unit, which was originally intended to house an academic honor group, has become a different type of honor organization.

She said that if these new rules prove successful in the experimental unit, the possibilities are that they may spread throughout the entire women's residence hall system.

Juba Warns Bicycle Riders To Heed All Traffic Laws

The State College Police are going to start "cracking down" on bicycle riders if they do not heed the traffic laws, Police Chief John R. Juba said yesterday.

Juba explained that his department has received too many complaints about bicycles being on the sidewalks and going against the lights.

He said that all bicycles should be kept in good mechanical condition and licensed and inspected by the borough. If bicycles are used at night they are required to have a light. A horn or other warning device is also a necessity, he added.

Any violation such as going against a light, going the wrong way on a one-way street or riding on the sidewalk will be handled as if the bike were a motor vehicle, he said.

The problems have become more acute this year, he said, because more students have bicycles on campus since the opening of East Halls.

Juba said his department does not want to start a "get rough" policy but if the warnings aren't heeded this will be necessary.

For those who have not had their bicycles inspected, two special times have been set up at the borough building on Frazier St. They are from 3 to 5 p.m. today and from 1 to 5 p.m. Friday.
