

Food Service 'Plan Ahead'

By CAROL KUNKLEMAN

If any University group has taken heed of the sayings "Plan Ahead" and "Be Prepared," it is the Department of Food and Housing. Besides storing foods for regular meal-time use, this sagacious group has been saving goods for times of emergency.

All foodstuffs used in University dining halls are shipped to the Food Stores Building, located on Route 322 next to the University golf course. The modern brick building, built three years ago, houses a bakery, butcher shop and offices besides regular storage space.

"National headquarters of civil defense have been informed of our normal supply of food and our capacity to produce goods in our bakery and butcher shop," Robert C. Proffitt, director of food service, said.

Times of emergency would be defined by the national civil defense office, Proffitt said. The food service office would then determine to what sources and areas the University food supply would be distributed.

With the amount of food presently on hand in the Food Stores Building, the approximately 15,000 students now on campus could eat according to the regular menu for about five days. This is the estimate of Miss Louise Schermerhorn, manager of the building.

"Except for fresh fish and produce, which we receive weekly, we would have enough food to last 10 days if a substitute diet were introduced," Miss Schermerhorn said.

About 14,000 pounds of meat are processed per week in the building's butcher shop, Miss Schermerhorn said. On hand in the building is an impressive 100,000 pound meat supply.

A spacious storeroom holds 48-50 railroad cars of canned goods. Twelve to 14 railroad cars of frozen food make a weekly appearance at the loading platforms.

facts may be achieved if one knows that each car contains 3,000 30-pound cases, or an impressive 90,000 pounds worth of frozen delights.

Dry stuffs — cereals, salt, sugar (the average weekly shipment is one-half of a railroad car), and paste products — are also stored in the building.

Although planning has been done by civil defense concerning national emergencies, many questions are still unanswered concerning proper procedure during an atomic attack.

At the University one unanswered question is how food will be transported to dining areas during a period of fallout. Stanley H. Campbell, director of University Services, said his department has been working on such questions, but no definite plans have been made.

Campbell attributes most of the indefinite plans to lack of information about fallout. Little information has been disseminated through government or national agencies, Campbell said.
