BORED WITH THE GAME: Although most of the 44,390 in attendance at the game were kept on the edge of their seats, this little girl found time to sleep.

WAITING FOR THE GAME TO START: Many of the early arrivals at the game used the benches under the stands as a place to eat lunch. Hot dogs and coffee made up the meal for these two women.

NOW I CAN SEE: Complaining that she couldn't see the game, the father of this future coed let her stand on his lap so she could cheer her favorite team on to victory.

EQUIPMENT USED FOR TELECAST: Three trucks and a portable generator were used to supply the electrical power and other lines to televise Saturday's game. The larger truck is normally used by station WABC in New York City but was brought here for the game.

PREPARING TO NARRATE THE GAME: Curt Gowdy, American Television Network sportscaster, checks his notes as he prepares to narrate the Penn State-Syracuse game Saturday. Standing in the back is an engineer who was checking all the equipment needed for the telecast.

EYES ABOVE BOARD: A member of the Block "S" Club keeps her white flash card at eye level as the section did one of its many stunts on Saturday for a capacity audience and millions of TV watchers.

LOOK MA, I'M ON TV: While everyone was watching Saturday's game, this man in a red suit walked up and down the sidelines and in the first few rows of seats to get close-up pictures to add color to the television coverage of the game. Here the expressions of three coeds are recorded.

THE TASTE OF VICTORY: Coach Rip Engle seems to be tasting his 100th victory as the final seconds click off the clock Saturday with the Lions ahead, 14-0. This Saturday Engle starts toward the 200 mark.
